

Defence cuts aim at £600m saving

Order for 33 Tornado jets is cancelled

By NICHOLAS WOOD, POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

ORDERS for 33 Tornado aircraft have been cancelled, giving the first firm indication of the direction the government is taking in its review of Britain's defence needs after the upheaval in eastern Europe.

The move is aimed at helping to secure emergency savings of more than £600 million so the defence ministry can stay within its £21.2 billion budget for this year.

Higher-than-expected inflation of 8 per cent has caused the shortfall and the cancellation of 33 of the 41 Tornados the RAF had been promised was not directly related to the government's "options for change" review.

However, Tom King, the defence secretary, acknowledged in the Commons that the decision to trim the Tornado programme did reflect the "emerging picture" from the reappraisal of the country's military requirements for the decade ahead.

More cuts "at the margin" of the defence programme will be announced over the next few weeks, Mr King said. They are needed to adjust his department's spending to a cut of 3 per cent in real terms, which has stemmed from the Treasury's allowance of 5 per cent for inflation this year.

Mr King has already announced an emergency ban on new equipment orders pending an urgent examination of possible immediate savings. Last month, he said that he was seeking reductions of £350 million, but yesterday he disclosed that the shortfall had grown to more than £600 million.

Mr King added that the measures he was taking, which had been largely decided, should enable the moratorium on new equipment contracts to be eased by the end of this month.

Mr King denied that the options for change review, which will lead to the circulation of an internal paper to Margaret Thatcher and ministerial colleagues by the end of next month, was being conducted without involving the three service chiefs.

He also denied there was a rift with Mr Clark, the minister for defence procurement who announced the cut in the Tornado order last night. Mr Clark has produced a report suggesting drastic cuts in Britain's forces and fundamental changes in the way they are deployed. Someone was trying to drive a wedge between them, but they were "singularly unwedged", Mr King told MPs.

Mr King also set out the areas for possible reductions being considered under the review. The most obvious scope for changes was in Europe, which had seen "quite remarkable changes" since the Commons last debated defence spending in October. Forces stationed in Germany could be cut depending on the outcome of arms control negotiations and agreed changes in Nato strategy.

"Obviously, this is one of the main areas we are looking at, covering not only our four divisions in BAOR (one an infantry division based in the UK), but also RAF Germany."

"This is not just a question of scale. If our stationed forces are smaller, then they will need mobility and flexibility and a balanced capability. But they would also not need so much fixed infrastructure — bases, depots and so on — on the present scale."

The review was examining the implications of the collapse of the Warsaw Pact for Britain's capacity to reinforce Nato's northern flank. It was also considering how to respond to the Soviet Union's decision to reduce the size of its navy, while modernizing at the same time.

Nato might come to rely more on sea- and air-borne reinforcements with smaller forces stationed in Europe on both sides and greater opportunity to exploit longer warning times. However, the core of Britain's defence needs would remain: an independent nuclear deterrent, a sub-strategic (tactical) nuclear capability, forces and equipment for the direct defence of the homeland, and forces capable of protecting British interests outside Nato such as the Falklands. Garrisons and reserves of rapid deployment forces were required.

Any changes "would not disrupt" the essential future of the nation's defences.

Mr King also made clear that in looking at options for change, he intended to ensure that service personnel remained well-motivated. That meant proper equipment and decent housing.

He said: "We are keeping in mind the importance of a sustainable balance between manpower and equipment expenditure, so that we have well-motivated people with the kit to match the task."

He also said he would inform service personnel, staff at the defence ministry and the defence industries of any proposals as soon as possible. Martin O'Neill, Labour's defence spokesman, said that on Mr King's own admission the finances of his ministry were a "shambles", since it was not capable of entering into new defence commitments.

Mr O'Neill said the "excessive secrecy" of the defence ministry's review made debate on arms reduction difficult. He called on Mr King to say whether the white paper on defence restructuring would be published before or during the parliamentary recess.

Mr O'Neill said it would take a change of government before this country could contribute to the new Europe, because the Conservative government had not appreciated the scale of the change. He added: "We must guard against post-imperial fantasies who would have us donning our pith helmet and charging out east again."

Mr Clark announced that the government would invite tenders for the EH101 Royal Navy helicopter next month. Next year, it would be awarding a prime contract to develop and build an initial batch of the anti-submarine aircraft powered by the Rolls-Royce Turbomeca RTM 322 engine.

Blow to factory, page 4
Parliament, page 7
Leading article, page 13

Police chief denies World Cup brutality

From JOHN GOODBODY IN CAGLIARI

EMILIO Pazzi, Sardinia's police commissioner, yesterday defended his officers over claims of brutality to innocent English football supporters, and Sepp Blatter, secretary general of Fifa, soccer's ruling body, said: "The police have done a sensational job."

Dr Pazzi said that most of the 7,000 English supporters behaved properly but about 500 people were trouble-makers. "Every time the police have acted it has been because a serious situation has occurred. It is not always possible to differentiate."

His words followed claims by the Football Supporters Association that innocent people on a march were attacked by officers.

Fourteen English supporters were given suspended sentences yesterday and face expulsion from Italy for being involved in disturbances last week while another was given a suspended sentence for theft. Clive James from Cricke-wood, north London, was jailed for 22 months and fined £1,500 for trying to bring drugs into Italy. He was released, pending an appeal.

World Cup, pages 40 and 44

The Queen Mother and the Prince of Wales making their way to St George's Chapel, Windsor, yesterday for an installation ceremony of the Order of the Garter

More tax capping signalled

By ROBIN OAKLEY
POLITICAL EDITOR

MARGARET Thatcher yesterday signalled her readiness to see more councils capped over their community charges.

It also emerged last night that capping could be backed by new powers requiring councils which insist on breaching government-set spending limits to face local referendums. That was said to be a "live option" before the cabinet committee considering revisions of the poll tax.

The plan is understood to have the backing of the Treasury, which regards it as capable of reconciling the main principle of the charge, that of accountability, with Whitehall spending curbs.

It is admitted that there are practical problems associated with the proposal, which has been backed by Michael Heseltine, a critic of the tax. The difficulties include the fear that setting such limits might encourage councils to spend more than they would have done otherwise; they could use the limit as a guide to how high they could take their spending without having to face the wrath of local electors. Mrs Thatcher made it

Continued on page 22, col 4

Dutch hold third IRA gang suspect

By JAMIE DETTMER

THE alleged third member of an IRA cell responsible for a string of bombings and shootings last year of British servicemen in West Germany was captured by Dutch police yesterday.

His arrest in the town of Chaam, close to the Belgian border, occurred only 20 minutes before a hunt was mounted for a fourth IRA suspect who fled in a car and later on foot from Dutch police after being asked to show identity papers.

Dutch police yesterday confirmed that the man they arrested in Chaam was the IRA suspect who escaped on Saturday from Belgian police after having been held at gunpoint by an elderly farmer. A police spokesman in Breda said the arrest took place after a dishevelled man wearing handcuffs was seen walking through the town.

Sinn Féin, the political wing of the IRA, denied that the man arrested yesterday was Michael Anthony Collins, the identity given him by a Belgian police official. But Sinn Féin did confirm that Donna Maguire, aged 23, and Gerard Harle, aged 31, were IRA members and had been arrested on Saturday by police in Belgium and Holland.

Miss Maguire and Mr Harle are wanted in West Germany for questioning in connection with the murder of Corporal Steve Smith in Hanover last July 2, and the bombing of British Army barracks in Osnabrück on June 19.

The round-up of IRA suspects began on Saturday when a farmer and his son stumbled on Miss Maguire, Mr Harle and a third man during an apparent training session in woods near Belgium's border with The Netherlands at Meerle. Mr Voortman, the farmer, at first believed the three were poachers. He held Miss Maguire and one of the men at gunpoint until police arrived. The man escaped after having been handcuffed.

Mr Harle, who had not been in contact with the Belgian police but had been on the receiving end of a warning shot from Mr Voortman's son, was later arrested by Dutch police near Breda.

Dutch police mounted intensive searches at the weekend for the third man. Shortly before 11 am Dutch time yesterday, he was spotted by people in Chaam and the police were alerted. He was arrested by three officers without putting up a struggle.

About 20 minutes after the

Continued on page 22, col 1
Criticism rejected, page 2
Leading article, page 13

Romanian MPs vote to quell protest as barricades go up

From CHRISTOPHER WALKER IN BUCHAREST

AMID warnings of a possible civil war, Romania's ruling National Salvation Front yesterday won a large majority in parliament for a motion calling on the security forces to break up a revived anti-government protest blocking all traffic in the commercial heart of the capital.

Government sources said the new sanction for force would be used only if all attempts to negotiate with the demonstrators failed. The vote was rushed through the second session of the newly elected parliament with only 72 of the 396 deputies voting against. It came hours after defiant protesters had erected makeshift barricades, ripped down last week, and draped them with a giant placard reading provocatively: "We are waiting for the tanks for the miners today."

As news of the controversial vote circulated, hundreds more demonstrators arrived to join the 1,500 already in place blocking the eight-lane boulevard and forcing traffic into side streets. The new arrivals marched through the city centre shouting "Jos Iliescu (Down with Iliescu)" and "Assassins", in reference to the recent assaults by mobs of pro-government miners.

The decision presented President Iliescu with a potentially crucial test of the loyalty of the security forces and with the prospect of further violence. The last attempt to remove demonstrators from University Square prompted riotous retaliation by miners wielding clubs and metal staves in a week that left six people dead and more than 400 injured.

Talk of possible civil conflict has been aggravated by recent evidence that the government can no longer count on the loyalty of sections of the security forces.

Shortly before yesterday's key parliamentary vote a large army lorry, full of young soldiers giving v-for-victory signs, was permitted to drive through the barricaded zone cut off to other vehicles. The smiling soldiers were given rousing applause by the demonstrators, who had previously been chanting rhythmic anti-government slogans.

Failure of the police to respond to the latest demonstrations had been compounded by extreme reluctance among army units to act against them. Informed diplomatic sources said that at one stage, during last week's rioting, front officials had admitted that only one army unit in the capital remained trustworthy and that had guarded government headquarters in Victory Square.

The sources added that General Viktor Stanculescu, the defence minister, was less pro-front than the man he replaced, General Nicolae Militaru, who took the job immediately after the revolution, but was regarded as being a Soviet puppet after being compromised by a KGB agent some years ago.

In an apparent attempt to win back lost international sympathy the government claimed last night to have rejected an offer by the miners from the distant Jiu Valley to return to clear the demonstrators. This was dismissed as window-dressing by diplomats who claimed that the miners were controlled by the front, and had not made their forays into Bucharest spontaneously.

The main warning of civil war came from Bishop Lazlo Toke, the Hungarian clergyman from Transylvania, who sparked off the original revolution which toppled Ceausescu. He likened the government's decision to unleash the miners last Thursday as equivalent to the Chinese communist leader's moves against pro-democracy activists in 1989.

The atmosphere of near-hysteria among some students was increased yesterday by rumours that their badly beaten leader, Marian Munteanu had been arrested during the day by unknown men and taken from his bed in the Bucharest emergency hospital where he was recovering from multiple wounds. Reporters were told he had left the building but it was not confirmed he was in police hands.

Fear grips Romanians, page 8
Mob-rule threat, page 12

20% OFF YOUR HOME INSURANCE

CALL TODAY

081-686 8877

Phone anytime 8am - 8pm Weekdays
9am - 2pm Saturdays

061-839 8877

DIRECT LINE INSURANCE

A member of The Royal Bank of Scotland Group
Direct Line Insurance plc, Direct Line House, 1 Edridge Road, Croydon, Surrey CR9 1AF
A member of the Association of British Insurers and a member of the Financial Conduct Authority

Mr Heseltine: Remarks come at a sensitive time

Heseltine on the attack over environment

By MICHAEL MCCARTHY
ENVIRONMENT CORRESPONDENT

MICHAEL Heseltine will take the government to task over two key areas of its environment policy, reform of the Nature Conservancy Council and the fight against global warming, when he addresses the Tory Reform Group in London this evening.

Mr Heseltine will call for the dismemberment of the conservancy council into English, Scottish and Welsh bodies, which is now being enacted, to be postponed until after publication in mid-September of the environment white paper. This will set out the government's environmental policy into the next century.

The former environment secretary will also call for the government to increase its efforts to control emissions of carbon dioxide, the gas blamed for global warming. Although he will not directly attack the government's target date of 2005 for stabilisation of Britain's emissions of the gas, which has been criticised as too lax, he will suggest that the general programme of energy-efficiency measures implied by it is not enough.

He will ask the government to do better by setting standards high enough to force companies manufacturing appliances using large amounts of electricity to develop the technology necessary to make them more energy efficient.

On both his main points of criticism, Mr Heseltine's intervention will come at a sensitive moment in the environmental debate now in progress within the government over the content of the environment white paper. There are voices in Whitehall calling for precisely the postponement of the break-up of the conservancy council which Mr Heseltine wants.

These voices argue that it makes no sense to alter the institutions responsible for developing wildlife and countryside policy only weeks before a strategic review of the future of the British countryside. The enabling legislation for the break-up of the conservancy council is contained in the Environmental Protection Bill which begins its committee stage in the House of Lords today.

With his comments on the government's global warming policy Mr Heseltine will touch another nerve, since Mr Chris Patten, the present environment secretary, originally pressed for Britain's carbon dioxide emissions to be stabilised by the year 2000 but was overruled in cabinet committee.

Letters, page 13

Saturday Review

"I was in love with a nun, as in love with her as I have been with any man, and I haven't been in love many times." Edna O'Brien talks about infatuation and Ireland in the first issue of the Saturday Review. The Times' new 64-page weekend supplement

INSIDE

Guerin to pay $189m

The former deputy chairman of Ferranti International was ordered by a High Court judge yesterday to pay $189 million to the two Ferranti subsidiaries he allegedly defrauded. Judgment was awarded against James Guerin after he failed to comply with court disclosure orders asking him to give details of the whereabouts of $450 million paid out by the Ferranti subsidiaries to five Panamanian companies. Page 23

Party victory

The official count after Bulgaria's parliamentary election yesterday confirmed victory for the former communist party. Page 8

Pay rise of 46%

Lord Rayner, the chairman of Marks & Spencer, received a 46 per cent pay rise last year, taking his salary from £424,401 to £619,961. Page 23

Weaker pound

The pound weakened as figures showed unit wage costs rising rapidly at 8.1 per cent and public borrowing running at £1.7 billion in May. Page 23

New engineers

A list of British Computer Society members newly-qualified as chartered engineers is published today. Page 29

INDEX

Arts	19, 20
Births, marriages, deaths	15
Court & Social	14
Crosswords	15, 22
Fashion	18
Law Report	35
Legal	34, 35
Leading articles	13
Letters	12
Obituary	14
TV & Radio	21
Weather	22

Spending curbs 'will raise rents by 25%'

By DOUGLAS BROOM, LOCAL GOVERNMENT CORRESPONDENT

GOVERNMENT curbs on local authority spending will lead to rises in council house rents of up to 25 per cent, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities said yesterday.

A survey of spending proposals in city areas from London to Liverpool found that rent rises this year would average 13 per cent, 2 per cent higher than suggested in environment department guidelines. Investment in housing by metropolitan authorities would fall by £640 million or 30 per cent this financial year and by a further £340 million next year. The association blamed the provisions of the Housing and Local Government Act which forbade councils from spending more than a quarter of capital receipts from council house sales on improvements, repairs or new houses.

A prohibition on the use of poll tax income to subsidise council house spending would lead to a fall of 15 per cent in the amount spent on repair and refurbishment of council houses and flats. The situation was worst in London where councils were being forced to go above the 20 per cent rent increase guidelines in order to keep up with repairs.

The document predicted that council rents would rise by £4.55 in greater London to an average of £29.31 a week. The smallest increase would be in Merseyside where rents would rise by an average of 75p a week to £20.85.

The survey concluded that more than half of metropolitan authorities would exceed government guidelines for rent increases this year although a quarter would be able to set increases below the rate predicted by Whitehall.

Two thirds of metropolitan authorities would spend more than the government allowance for repair and maintenance and overall spending on council house repairs would be 7 per cent above the figure set by ministers.

Sir Jack Layden, chairman of the association said that the gap between what local authorities were spending on all areas of their activities and the figures recommended by ministers was in danger of becoming "a Grand Canyon". Government claims of "overspending" were based on assessments of spending which wildly under-estimated the amounts that councils had to spend to keep pace with inflation.

Talks between local government leaders and ministers, scheduled for the next fortnight, are expected to centre on claims that the gap between official standard spending assessments and actual council spending could top £8 billion next year, placing many more councils at risk of charge capping.

Last night Chris Patten, the environment secretary, laid the formal parliamentary orders confirming "caps" on the community charge levied by Basildon, Bristol, and Doncaster councils. They were not in the group which contested the government's right to limit their poll tax levels.

Duffy died after being hit in the chest by a plastic bullet fired during rioting in the Republican New Lodge area of Belfast last summer.

A Grumman Avenger torpedo bomber on the tarmac yesterday at Duxford airfield, Cambridgeshire, awaiting its unveiling by the former Senator John Tower, of Texas. He is joint chairman of a £6 million fund-raising campaign to build an American air museum on the site as a tribute to US airmen who served from British bases in the second world war. The aircraft has been named after President Bush, who flew a similar model as a US Navy pilot during the war, and has been repainted in the president's flying colours.

Irish reject criticism over release of Donna Maguire

By EDWARD GORMAN, IRISH AFFAIRS CORRESPONDENT

THE Irish government yesterday rejected criticism of extradition procedure in the Republic after it emerged that Donna Maguire had been released in Dublin earlier this year, despite an extradition request by West Germany.

In a brief statement, the Attorney-general's office said that Ireland fully subscribed to the European convention on extradition and the European convention of the suppression of terrorism. Both were fully reflected in Irish extradition law.

The statement said that in the Maguire case all "appropriate procedures" had been followed. It added that since Miss Maguire was being held on criminal charges in Belgium it would be improper to comment further.

The Germans made what is believed to have been an informal request for Miss Maguire's extradition last September while she was in custody awaiting trial on charges related to possession of explosives. German police wanted to question her about IRA attacks on British Army barracks as Osnabruck and the murder of Steven Smith, a corporal, in Hanover in July 1988.

Miss Maguire had been arrested the previous July in Rosslare, Co Wexford, after arriving on a ferry from Cherbourg. She was acquitted by a special court in Dublin in February after which her whereabouts were unknown until her arrest on Sunday.

Irish government sources have suggested that the Germans had not completed warrants in time to secure extradition. It was clear during her trial, at which a German police officer was present as an observer, that the Germans were very interested in questioning her.

Dublin lawyers speculated that the Germans may not have had enough evidence for a specific charge to be brought or may have been caught unaware by her acquittal. They also pointed out that once acquitted, there was no way in which the Irish authorities could keep Miss Maguire in detention on the off-chance that the Germans might decide they wanted her.

Miss Maguire's mother spoke yesterday of her shock at hearing her 23-year-old daughter had been arrested again. Mrs Patricia Maguire said at her home in John Martin Gardens in Newry, Co Down that the family had been told nothing by the Belgian authorities about the arrest.

"I don't know what is happening, as far as I knew, she had only been in Belgium for a few days," Mrs Maguire said. She would not comment on what her daughter might have been doing there.

Her father runs a steel fabrication business in the town, making railings and fences. Miss Maguire has a younger sister, and two brothers.

A friend said: "This has taken a lot of people by surprise. Her father is a respected businessman."

Leading article, page 13

Oxford graduate may lose PhD in cheating enquiry

By DAVID TYTLER, EDUCATION EDITOR

AN OXFORD University graduate may lose his doctorate in one of the first cheating investigations in the university's 800-year history.

A university tribunal has found the student guilty of copying a thesis submitted by another student at a different university. The student's papers for his philosophy doctorate are now being examined by Congregation, the Oxford parliament.

University officials are investigating claims that a large proportion of the student's thesis, which is meant to produce original arguments to prove a theory, was identical or similar to another paper, parts of which were published in an academic periodical.

The student will have to answer claims that more than three-quarters of the first part of the thesis was the same or nearly the same as a previously published paper and that he gave no acknowledgement to this. The student denied plagiarism, pointing out that in a monograph based on the thesis, he acknowledged that he had used three published articles.

The tribunal which has already investigated the case has found "without hesitation" that he was guilty "to a very considerable extent" and recommended he should lose his degree.

A university spokesman said: "This is a serious matter. It is the first time I can remember anything like this happening in the 800 years of the university's history."

The student will not be named until Congregation has decided whether he should lose the doctorate.

Top officer not told of jail riot warning

THE most senior uniformed officer in Strangeways prison on the day of the riot was not told of warnings that it was going to happen, the enquiry into the disturbance was told yesterday.

Alan Zegveldt, a principal officer, said he was told nothing of a written warning from an inmate that the riot would happen in the chapel, nor of two other warnings that had been given to prison officers. He said: "If all that information had been available to me at the time and it had been evaluated, then I would have asked to see the governor in charge to see what action we were going to take. I would have regarded it as a serious situation."

Lord Justice Woolf, leading the enquiry into the riot and other disturbances in jails in April, described the omission as an unfortunate breakdown in communication.

Mr Zegveldt said that on the Sunday of the riot he was in charge of C wing. He was also the most senior officer below governor rank in the jail. When he arrived on duty he was "pushed for time" after sleeping in, although not late. He would normally have arrived 15 to 30 minutes earlier than needed and would have looked at the log kept in the main centre of the prison.

When he called in the centre box no mention was made to him of the warnings. Mr Zegveldt said he called all officers from the jail's four wings to a briefing because he had sensed there was unrest the previous evening. Asked about the specific warnings of trouble, he said: "I knew nothing about that whatsoever."

He ordered one extra officer from each of the wings to be sent to the chapel service, but only because of the unrest the night before. He assumed this action led people to believe he knew of the warnings. Mr Zegveldt agreed that prisoners entering the chapel should have been searched, although this had never happened while he had been at the prison.

Andrew Collins, QC, for the prison department, said the information warning of a riot - entered in the prison log the night before - had made it appear that it was anonymous. In fact, it had come from a known inmate. Mr Zegveldt agreed it would have been usual for the fact that it had come from a known source to be entered in the log.

Mr Collins said: "That would be vital in assessing the reliability of the information. It appears, does it not, that the information was not sufficient to enable the proper precautions to be taken?" Mr Zegveldt said: "That is correct."

The enquiry continues today.

Sacked workers offered £100 less

A FACTORY workforce was dismissed and then offered the jobs back if it accepted a pay cut of £100 a week and compulsory overtime.

Management at Hayes Shell Cast foundry in Lye, West Midlands, said that the return to work offer had expired yesterday and 120 foundry workers had "sacked themselves" and were not eligible for redundancy payments. The firm, which makes parts for Massey Ferguson, tractor manufacturers, and Fiat, is advertising the jobs at the new rates of pay.

Mr John Walsh, a TGWU official, said the management had treated the workers with "utter contempt". He said that three years ago the workers had shown loyalty by accepting a 10 per cent pay cut.

Mr Walsh said that his members had been asked to take pay cuts of up to £100 a week, cuts in holiday pay worth up to £80 and to agree to overtime as a condition of employment. "The management has treated a loyal workforce disgracefully and now want to throw them on the jobs scrapheap," he said.

The workforce walked out after a ballot when the new terms were offered at the firm's annual pay and conditions review.

Paul Winters, managing director of the firm, said yesterday that the workforce's refusal to accept the new offer meant they had dismissed themselves.

"Our return to work offer expired today. Members of the TGWU who did not accept our offer by that time must now be considered properly dismissed and no longer eligible for employment by Hayes Shell Cast," he said.

He added that 50 new workers had been taken on in the past few weeks.

Changes in working conditions including proposed 10-minute cuts in tea breaks led 1,000 workers at Jacob's biscuit factory in Aintree, Liverpool to strike. A union official said he feared the changes would lead to job losses.

Letter cost up by 2p in September

THE price of first class and second class stamps is to rise by 2p from September 17, to 22p and 17p respectively, the Royal Mail said yesterday (Tim Jones writes).

The Royal Mail said the rises were in line with inflation and needed to pay for cost increases, to finance record investment and to improve reliability to customers.

The announcement of the increases coincides with the results of an independent survey, commissioned by the Royal Mail, which showed that it came first in Europe in terms of letter reliability.

The study, carried out in March by Research International of London, found that four first-class letters in five were delivered on the day after posting.

Racist charge

Birmingham city council was accused at an industrial tribunal yesterday of racially discriminating against an Asian applicant when it appointed a white teacher to a post at Springfield Road school, at which more than 90 per cent of pupils were of Asian origin. The hearing continues.

Crash cover-up

Andrew Johnson, aged 26, of Wigan, Greater Manchester, a police constable who admitted conspiring to pervert the course of justice by covering up his drink-driving crash, was yesterday sentenced at Liverpool Crown Court to nine months' imprisonment. He has resigned the force.

'Dismal' science

Science students in higher education are often forced to work in "dismal" laboratories with an unsatisfactory standard of teaching, according to a report from Her Majesty's Inspectorate published yesterday. Poor conditions lead to high drop-out rates from science courses, it says.

Stunt damages

Rocky Taylor, aged 45, a stuntman from Cobham, Surrey, who suffered burns and fractures when a stunt went wrong during the filming of Death Wish III, was awarded £220,000 agreed damages against London Cannon Films in the High Court in London yesterday.

Wall inquest

The comedian Max Wall had a brain tumour that was gradually causing blindness, a Westminster inquest was told yesterday. He was probably unaware of the illness. A verdict of accidental death was recorded on Mr Wall, who died, aged 82, from head injuries suffered in a fall.

7590

METRES UNTIL THEY MEET.*

A BREAKTHROUGH FOR BRITAIN.

*Metres to be bored in the service tunnel (one of three tunnels under construction) as at 17.6.90. The system is expected to be operational in 1993.

The Guinness trial

Unkempt Saunders
'a suicide risk after total breakdown'

By PAUL WILKINSON

ERNEST Saunders, the former Guinness chairman, was accused yesterday of putting his vanity before the truth, and of lying to save himself.

Mr Saunders had suffered a nervous breakdown "of tremendous proportions" so that his friends believed he was on the verge of suicide, counsel for one of his co-defendants said. He had spent three or four days under sedation in a London clinic and had then been treated for a breakdown in Switzerland, where he was unwashed, unshaven and unable to answer simple questions, Southwark Crown Court was told. "You have been wriggling on your self-inflicted hook ever since," Mr Michael Sherrard, QC, for Mr Gerald Ronson said.

Mr Sherrard opened the cross-examination of Mr Saunders with a warning that the witness should be "under no illusion" of what he would be claiming. "I shall be suggesting that you made share support agreements with Heron in good faith and quite honestly at the time they were made; that you did not at the time appreciate the full legal implications of these agreements; that you became alarmed at the end of 1986 when Department of Trade inspectors were appointed; that you were advised that the arrangements might be open to serious criticism; that you thought your position as a newly-recognised captain of industry was in danger and you could very suddenly become one of the mighty fallen."

"You began to believe, maybe rightly, that the Guinness family might desert you despite everything you had done for it. You put your vanity before the truth and you began to tell lies as to your knowledge and participation in the agreements.

"You suffered an almost total physical and mental breakdown in 1987. You have been wriggling on your self-inflicted hook ever since, accusing all who pointed the finger of criticism at you of being liars and worse."

Mr Saunders replied: "I hear what you say, it does not surprise me. It is utterly untrue and I very much resent the implications that you have made. They are quite scurrilous and disgraceful."

Mr Saunders, Mr Ronson, the chairman of Heron International, the stockbroker Anthony Parnes and the financier Sir Jack Lyons deny 24 counts arising out of Guinness's takeover in 1986 of the Scottish drinks group Distillers. They all deny theft, false accounting and breaches of the companies act.

Mr Saunders agreed that he had been under tremendous pressure during the takeover and that he felt "pretty jaded". Mr Sherrard asked him: "By Christmas 1986, you learned that the arrangement you had made or confirmed with Gerald Ronson and the others was open to serious criticism, even though you and he had done it honestly at the time."

"I suggest that you, having endured this very difficult year in which you had reached the peaks of success and the depths of despair, could not cope with the truth and you went into a psychological nose-dive of disbelief, unable to believe that you might have been, however innocently, a party to dishonesty."

Mr Saunders replied: "You are making a very nice story here, which might suit your book or your client's, but it is not correct and I won't accept it. You can play the psychology as much as you like, but in terms of me going into some sort of nose-dive and being unable to tell the truth, it is utter nonsense. I didn't get involved or know anything about improper matters."

He said his concern was not for his own position, but for the company he had helped to rescue from "virtual bankruptcy" and for his staff and shareholders.

Mr Sherrard continued: "By the beginning of 1987 you were heading for a mental and physical breakdown of tremendous proportions. You truly believed there was a dishonest plot, to get rid of you."

Mr Saunders: "There was undoubtedly a move to get rid of me. I was also shocked by the DTI enquiry. It did not come as a pleasure in life. In terms of your medical diagnosis I think you are some degrees over the top."

Asked if he had felt depressed, Mr Saunders said he had been dismissed in the most callous way and Guinness had then begun a civil action against him freezing his bank account and assets. "It was the most vindictive act a company could do to a former chairman," he said.

Mr Sherrard said: "You saw yourself as alone and beleaguered. You were in such a condition that you had to be admitted to the Lister Clinic in Chelsea and be put under heavy sedation by the end of February 1987."

Mr Saunders: "I do not know what innuendo you are trying to put on that. The facts are that having stepped aside as chairman and having believed that a period of a few days in a health farm would do the trick, which it obviously didn't, I should spend three or four days at the Lister Clinic. It was so that I could be able to sleep undisturbed by the media."

He said that he had been admitted under an assumed name and that the press were besieging the family home at Penn in Buckinghamshire.

Mr Sherrard renewed his suggestion that Mr Saunders had suffered a breakdown while his wife Carol had received treatment at a Swiss clinic for a breakdown of her own. "Friends were concerned because you had ceased to take care of yourself," he said. "You refused to shave, you failed to keep yourself clean, you were unable to answer simple questions and they were so alarmed that they sent for medical help. By March 1987, we have the unhappy picture of you and your wife confined in the same clinic."

Mr Saunders replied: "I don't know where you get that picture from, but if it is in a doctor's report fair enough. I cannot say if I was wearing a tie or shaving; I felt bloody awful."

"Did you know you were regarded as a serious suicide risk at the time?" Mr Saunders: "I certainly cannot remember that. Suicide? I might have contemplated many things, but suicide, never, never, never. That never crossed my mind."

"Your inability to face the true music contributed to your downfall."

Mr Saunders: "No."

Mr Sherrard asked Mr Saunders if he could recall Mr Olivier Roux, Guinness's finance director, or Mr Roger Seelig, the former head of corporate finance at the merchant bank Morgan Grenfell, whether they had ever indicated whether "indemnity or success fees were regarded as acceptable practice, or at the very worst a breach of the rules which might lead to the professional advisers getting a wrap on the knuckles from the takeover panel."

Mr Saunders replied, "No". The case continues today.

Tree-shirts: Carol Keating, the television presenter, sitting amid foliage at the conservatory in the Barbican, London, yesterday, to launch Oxfam's T-shirts being sold in a high street store to fund tree planting in Ethiopia

O'Connor libel case halted for enquiries

By DAVID YOUNG

A LIBEL action brought by Tom O'Connor, the comedian, against Mirror Group Newspapers over allegations of his involvement with prostitutes was halted by a high court judge yesterday after the Director of Public Prosecutions asked police on Merseyside to carry out enquiries into new allegations.

Mr Justice Michael Davies postponed the action after a hearing in private. He said that a prosecution might take place. It is understood that allegations about interference with witnesses have been made to police.

The defended case was immediately moved into private session. The judge later gave a brief statement in open court saying that information had reached the court which he felt ought properly to be dealt with in chambers.

"Material has been placed before the Director of Public Prosecutions which has caused him immediately and urgently to initiate a police enquiry into allegations which have been made. It would not be in the interests of justice to go into any further detail."

"It is possible, no higher than that, that as a result of the enquiries a prosecution might take place. This court has decided the right course is for the trial to be postponed." The judge said that neither Mr O'Connor nor Mirror Group Newspapers had asked for the delay.

Mr O'Connor, aged 50, of South Ascot, Berkshire, has started his libel action against Mirror Group Newspapers over 14 articles during October and November 1988 in The People, the Sunday Mirror and the Daily Mirror.

● Alex Pascall, the broadcaster and musician, won "substantial" libel damages in the high court yesterday against The Voice, a weekly newspaper, over allegations that he was the "godfather" of the Notting Hill Carnival and involved in fraud and corruption.

● Malcolm Sinclair, a police inspector in the royal protection squad, won "substantial" libel damages in the high court yesterday against Mirror Group Newspapers over allegations in The People that he cheated to gain promotion.

University staff claim extra intake will strain resources

By TOM GILES

THE quality of teaching at British universities will decline sharply unless the government increases funding to meet expected rises in student numbers, the Association of University Teachers said yesterday.

In its annual report, the association said there was a risk of the infrastructure of universities "falling apart at the seams" after a decade of cuts in funding. It added that a 12 per cent fall in numbers of full-time university-financed staff since 1979, coupled with a projected 10 per cent increase in the student population by 1992 posed an "uncontestable" threat to quality.

The report, which was submitted to the education department today, says that, in spite of the 10 per cent increase in funding announced last November by John MacGregor, the education secretary, there should be a further 17 per cent increase in departmental spending next year to allow universities to deal with the additional students.

The association, which has 31,000 members, said the introduction of competitive bidding for student expenditure later this year would place greater pressure on universities to undercut "guide prices" set by the University Funding Council and lead to lower government funding per student.

The report added that long-term underfunding had seriously impaired university provision for research, staff, building maintenance and salaries. "On every front, university provision is in a parlous state. Expansion which maintains quality cannot take place until the current crises of low staff morale and uncompetitive pay are resolved by both adequate funding and new long-term pay machinery," the report concluded.

The ratio of students to staff, which averaged 11 to one, was likely to rise further as "uncompetitive" salaries curtailed recruitment. The report claimed that academic salaries were up to 30 per cent below those of comparable professional groups.

The education department said the report was "tendentious" and relied heavily on anecdotal examples. "We don't accept that standards are threatened. Higher education gets a proper share of public expenditure. Funding has risen by over 8 per cent in real terms since 1979," it said.

'Wider grounds' to quash Maguire verdicts

By MICHAEL HORSNELL

IRREGULARITIES in scientific evidence used to convict the defendants in the Annie Maguire IRA bomb factory case meant the grounds for quashing the verdicts were much wider than those "grudgingly" admitted by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP), it was alleged yesterday.

David Clarke QC, leading counsel to the May enquiry into the convictions, made his closing submission after a statement by the DPP and the home secretary last week that the convictions were "unsafe and unsatisfactory". Innocent contamination of defendants' hands by nitro-glycerine could not be ruled out.

Mr Clarke said there were grounds for quashing the convictions on the basis of material irregularities in the trial and, also, on a point of law. Jurors who had convicted the Maguires 14 years ago had no reason to reproach themselves because they had not heard the evidence available to the enquiry, he said.

If disclosures to the enquiry had been known, they would have destroyed the entire prosecution case and the credibility of its forensic scientist expert witnesses, Mr Clarke said. The "Maguire Seven" were sentenced to between five and 14 years imprisonment. Convictions were made solely on evidence of traces of nitro-glycerine on their hands and on gloves used by Mrs Maguire.

At the end of the enquiry's first phase, Mr Clarke said: "We submit that the convictions are liable to be quashed on much wider grounds than those conceded by the DPP last Thursday." Scientists at the Royal Armament Research and Development Establishment where the nitro-glycerine tests were carried out, had failed to disclose important details at the trial.

The second phase of the enquiry will consider the wrongful convictions of the Guildford Four, who were released last year. That cannot start until after a police enquiry into alleged malpractice by Surrey detectives in the conviction of the four, and any prosecutions that arise from it.

The Maguire family came under police scrutiny after the Guildford and Woolwich public house bombings, when they were implicated in confessions, later retracted, by two of the Guildford Four.

Michael Sherrard, left, accused Ernest Saunders of putting vanity before truth

Farmer bequeaths
pillows to prince

THE late Sir Joseph Nickerson, a multi-millionaire farmer, has ensured the Prince and Princess of Wales will sleep soundly for at least the next 30 years. In his £7,479,207 will, published today, Sir Joseph, who farmed 5,000 acres at Rothwell, Lincoln, directed his trustees to give eight pillows to the Prince on the occasion of his 10th, 20th, 30th and 40th wedding anniversaries.

The Prince, who married in July 1981, gets the first set next year. The pillows were to be made to the same specification as those Sir Joseph gave to the Prince as a wedding gift. The Prince also benefits from a £1,000 bequest to the Royal Agricultural Society of England to buy extra fittings for the president's washroom in the Royal pavilion at the society's showground at Stoneleigh, Warwickshire. The Queen was present last year and next year the Prince will have the title.

Sir Joseph died in his sleep in the United States in March, aged 75. He was a brilliant shot and achieved a world record of 2,119 wild English partridge in one day with five other guns. The Prince of Wales, Prince Philip, and other members of the royal family frequently visited his Rothwell and Middleton in Teesdale estate in Durham.

● Members of the family of the late Lord Rothschild, who died in March, yesterday dismissed reports that he had cut the three children of his first marriage out of his will.

In a newspaper interview his elder daughter, the Hon Sarah Daniel, claimed that she and her sister and brother expected to be left only token keepsakes out of an estate which she estimated to be worth £500,000. The will has not yet been published.

But the Hon Miriam Rothschild, Lord Rothschild's sister, said yesterday he had taken care of all members of his family while he was alive. There was no question of the children of his first marriage being denied their inheritance. "They were all handsomely provided for well before he died. What is in his will is simply what is left over, and is relatively insignificant."

Mrs Daniel, who made the allegations in the Daily Mail, refused to talk to reporters at her home in Cambridge yesterday.

Latest wills, page 14

Smallish dictionary sets sail in a big sea

By PHILIP HOWARD, LITERARY EDITOR

DICTIONARIES come not as single spies, but in battalions these bustling days, in a cut-throat market. The latest, about to be launched into these turbulent waters on July 5, is the frigate of the Oxford armada, the eighth edition of The Concise Oxford Dictionary, known to its friends as COD, (Oxford, £10.95). Like all new dictionaries, it aims to give us the latest word on our ever-changing language, and our new words that define our age, not always flatteringly, from Browne points to videocassettes. Like all new dictionaries, it will start to go out of date as soon as it is published.

COD is not quite the oldest small dictionary of current English in the trade, known in the jargon of the ad-men as a "family" or household (ie smallish) dictionary. Chambers preceded it by 10 years. But COD is probably the best known, and has the most distinguished history. The first edition in 1911 was edited by the Fowler brothers (The King's English), grammarians and lexicographers extraordinary, eccentric, passionate, and in fact quite permissive rather than prescriptive, pace the publisher's hype. H. W. Fowler wrote: "The object we set before us was to present as vivid a picture as the small dictionary could be made to give of the English that was being spoken and written at the time."

This is still the object. But the technology is state-of-the-art COD. This dictionary has been compiled electronically, from the vast shipyard of the Oxford dictionary department. COD has more than 20,000 new entries, many of them the new acronyms and scientific jargon at which Collins has traditionally been stronger.

Measuring the size and depth of dictionaries is a contentious statistic between these warring fleets. But by my count, COD has 1,452 pages, with 10 otiose blank ones for notes (as if one wanted to keep notes at the back of one's dictionary), 120,000 headwords, and 190,000 definitions. It is pure dictionary, not encyclopaedia, so that if you want a book that tells you about famous people and places, this is not for you.

It has been redesigned and reorganised, with the long overdue conversion of Oxford to the International Phonetic Alphabet. Far more words from science and technology, and from other Englishes such as American, Australian, New Zealand, and Indian have been included.

The editor of the eighth edition of the COD is Robert Allen, a former classicist and ancient historian. As introduction he has written a history of English over 15 centuries and a potted history of COD itself. "The COD is an institution," he says. "It is even cited in lawsuits (though usually from old editions). When we began the work of writing this edition we were faced, essentially, with the task of producing a dictionary for the 1990s without making it totally unrecognizable as the Concise."

DIAL
0898-10-10-10.
RIDE RODEO IN TEXAS.
ROUND-UP A $40,000 MUSTANG.

5 CLASSIC AMERICAN CARS INCLUDING THE 1960's FORD SHELBY MUSTANG GT350 2DR., V-8 POWERED FASTBACK AND 100 UNIQUE ACTION-PACKED HOLIDAY EXPERIENCES IN THE USA MUST BE WON.

INSTANT PRIZES OF ZIPPO LIGHTERS, RAY-BAN SUNGLASSES, SKI SWEATERS, BEACH TOWELS OR MONEY CLIPS, FOR EVERY CORRECT ENTRY, IN RETURN FOR TEN MARLBORO PACK TOPS.

ONLY OPEN TO UK RESIDENT SMOKERS AGED 18 YEARS OR OVER. PHONE LINES CLOSE ON JULY 15TH. CHARGES PER MINUTE: 25P CHEAP/38P OTHER TIMES (INCLUDING VAT). ONLY ONE INSTANT GIFT/PRIZE AND COMPETITION ENTRY PER SMOKER. FULL DETAILS AND RULES OF ENTRY DESPATCHED WITH EACH PRIZE CLAIM. PROMOTER: ROTHMANS (UK) LTD, AYLESBURY HP21 8SZ

LOW TO MIDDLE TAR As defined by H.M. Government
Warning: SMOKING CAN CAUSE
HEART DISEASE
Health Departments' Chief Medical Officers

Tornado cuts strike third blow to British Aerospace factory

By MICHAEL EVANS
DEFENCE CORRESPONDENT

AN urgent need to cut this year's defence budget by £250 million has forced the defence ministry to cancel an order for 33 Tornado aircraft for the RAF.

An extra 41 Tornados had been promised by the government in November 1988 to replace any aircraft lost during training. Only eight will now be ordered, all of them the air defence version.

The cancellation of 26 ground attack and seven air defence Tornados, each worth at least £20 million, will help the ministry to resolve this year's budget problems caused by a mixture of higher-than-forecast inflation and an unexpectedly expensive 1989-90 financial year during which a number of substantial equipment bills had to be paid.

The extra Tornados were not thought to be in doubt earlier in the year, when it was estimated that savings of £350 million would have to be found. But yesterday the figure rose to £600 million.

Mr King's decision to cut the order was made easier by the fact that the attrition rate for the front-line aircraft has been relatively low. Although about two dozen Tornados, most of them the ground attack version, have crashed in training since they began flying in 1980, statistically the losses are not regarded as excessive.

However, the cancellation of most of the eighth batch of Tornados, partly built by British Aerospace at its factory in Warton, Lancashire, has come after the loss of an order from Malaysia for up to 12 of the aircraft. An order from Jordan also fell through last year. The £400 million order from Malaysia was cancelled last month because the government considered the aircraft too expensive and too advanced for its needs. It may instead order about 20 Hawk jets, also built by British Aerospace.

The RAF had been promised 41 more Tornados. It will now get only eight after urgent defence ministry spending cuts

The Wharton factory, which employs 14,000 people, is still building Tornados for the RAF, and for West Germany, Italy and Saudi Arabia.

The RAF which has a requirement for 390 Tornados, of which 165 are the air defence version, still has about 50 to be delivered. The Germans, who, with the Italians, are partners in the Tornado collaborative programme, are waiting for another 20 of the electronic counter-measure version. The Italian order for 100 Tornados has been completed.

Saudi Arabia, which has given a firm order for 72, needs another 30 to complete the contract. A second order for a further 48 is under discussion.

Although the Tornado is regarded as a highly successful project, Saudi Arabia has been the only country, apart from the three nations in the programme, to have bought the aircraft.

The defence ministry cancellation means British Aerospace, which builds the front and rear of the aircraft, will have to adjust the workload at Warton. There are enough orders for about two years, so alternative work will have to be found for the "nuts and bolts" men on the manufacturing floor after 1992.

However, British Aerospace hopes the ministry will award it a production contract for a Tornado mid-life update in the latter part of the decade. The company was given a development contract for the update that will last until about 1992. If the new equipment required by the RAF is integrated satisfactorily, a production contract should keep the company's Tornado business in a fairly healthy state until the end of the decade.

But it was made clear yesterday that the implications of the cancelled order for 33 Tornados will also be absorbed into the defence ministry's options-for-change review. The mid-life update is also likely to be included in the assessment of the RAF's requirements in the future.

About a quarter of British Aerospace contracts come from the government. The rest involve orders from abroad. The company is developing the next generation fighter, the European Fighter Aircraft, in collaboration with West Germany, Italy and Spain. British Aerospace is confident that the government will go ahead with that project, although it is likely that the RAF requirement will be reduced as part of the options-for-change review.

Last week Alan Clark, the minister for defence procurement, said the government was committed to EFA.

Leading article, page 13

JAMES GRAY

Funding bar threatens Heathrow expansion

By HARVEY ELLIOTT, AIR CORRESPONDENT

PROPOSALS to build a fifth terminal at Heathrow airport may be scrapped after the transport department's refusal to meet all but a small proportion of the cost.

The cost of moving sludge works at the western edge of the airport, building the terminal and improving road access is put at £2 billion. BAA, formerly the British Airports Authority, agreed to finance most of the project, including the cost of new access roads around the terminal.

The bill for improving these roads and the main roads from London to the airport was put at around £650 million. BAA had hoped that the government would provide most of the funds for improving the main roads. Cecil Parkinson, secretary, however, has said in preliminary talks that the government will not fund more than 20 per cent of that figure and that BAA should pick up the remaining £400 million to improve the M4 and M25 in the airport area and over most of the route to central London.

BAA said that only between 8 and 14 per cent of all M4 traffic leaving London was bound for the airport and that the transport department had published plans to widen and resurface many of the roads before the plan for terminal five was mooted. BAA claims that the department is trying to push the cost of improving roads on to the private sector in a way that would lead to a sharp rise in air fares.

The company has not decided whether to proceed with terminal five, claiming that the engineering and planning problems require a long and detailed study. Behind the scenes, however, BAA is fighting a bitter battle with Whitehall over the costs as well as holding discussions with several local authorities about access roads.

Terminal five is regarded as essential to Heathrow if it is to cope with the increase in the number of air passengers, which is expected to double over the next decade. The proposal to build the terminal on a site now owned by Thames water authority has been attacked by local protest groups opposed to any further development of Heathrow, but it was hoped that BAA, supported by British Airways and the transport department, would be able to present a united front at the public enquiry that is bound to follow a planning application.

BAA has been anxious to play down the dispute and, officially at least, remains confident that the company will win over the government and persuade it to put up a greater proportion of the money. A decision on putting forward a formal planning application should have been taken by now. Yesterday Sir Norman Payne, the BAA chairman, said that this would not take place until the autumn because a change in planning laws had made it necessary to consult the local authorities first.

BAA and the airlines fear that the transport department is determined to follow the precedent set by its refusal to fund the Channel tunnel high-speed rail link and to insist that the whole of the infrastructure costs are carried by private industry. If the department maintains these arguments, BAA will concentrate instead on developing Stansted, which the airlines argue would hand rival airports at Amsterdam and Paris an opportunity to overtake Heathrow as Europe's biggest gateway airport.

BAA is already concerned at having had to find £96 million last year to pay for security at Heathrow, which, under existing government rules, it has not been able to claim back in increased landing fees.

A BARGE passes the concrete pillars of the new road bridge rising over the Thames at Dartford, Kent, one of two projects aimed at improving transport across the river (Christopher Worman writes). A proposal to link the banks of the Thames with a cable car between Woolwich Arsenal and the Royal Docks was announced yesterday by a consortium led by the consulting engineering group Acer. The £20 million link, called the sky shuttle, claims to offer a reasonably priced solution to transport problems in London Docklands until further transport links can be built. Acer, which designed the Humber Bridge and the two bridges over the Bosphorus at Istanbul, aims to construct a steel suspension bridge carrying cable cars between the stations at North Woolwich and Woolwich Arsenal. The shuttle, based on Swiss cable car technology, would carry up to 8,000 passengers an hour. The project has the support of the London Docklands Development Corporation and could be open by 1993.

Home energy measuring plan 'would save £1.8bn'

By CHRISTOPHER WARMAN, PROPERTY CORRESPONDENT

A NATIONWIDE scheme to measure the energy efficiency of homes, which aims to conserve energy and cut fuel bills, was launched by the National Energy Foundation yesterday, with a little help from the prime minister.

Margaret Thatcher went to Islington, north London, to present the first national home energy rating certificate to Mark and Elizabeth Goodman, who had allowed their end-of-terrace house to be used for the scheme.

Under the plan, houses and flats are rated from 0 to 10 on a scale to test energy efficiency. The national average is 3.3. The Goodman home rated 3.4 and with the spending of £6,000 to bring in a new boiler and other improvements the foundation boosted the efficiency of the house by two points to give it a rating well above average.

The foundation said that for most existing homes, spending £1,000 can greatly improve energy efficiency. For the least efficient homes, spending £500 would improve them significantly. A house built to the new 1990 building regulations would score about six on the scale.

Mary Archer, chairman of the foundation, said that there was enormous potential for reducing domestic energy consumption. "We have calculated that in the UK today something in the order of 16 million homes would have a rating of below four, with more than three million homes under two. There are hardly any properties which could score 10.

"If we could raise all homes in the UK by one point on the rating scale, we would save £1.8 billion a year and reduce total UK carbon dioxide emissions by 4 per cent per annum, a real contribution to combating the greenhouse effect and producing significant financial savings for households."

Energy rating of the home would be carried out by qualified assessors, taking into account the location, design and construction of the home, its heating system and controls, fuel used, lighting systems and appliances. It also points to areas where improvements can be made. The rating assessment costs between £25 and £30 for a new house, where a builder is providing a number of properties, and £60 to £70 for an existing house.

There are already a number of energy labelling schemes in operation, but the foundation, formed in February to promote energy awareness and its efficient use, hopes that this new scheme will become the standard.

Mrs Thatcher's participation shows the government's support, and it will be monitored by the Building Research Establishment.

Lower prices urged to enliven housing market

House prices are either static or falling in almost all parts of England and Wales, the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors reports in its house price survey to the end of May (Christopher Worman writes).

The report, confirming the continuing slump in the market, says that 45 per cent of the 123 estate agents who contributed to the survey reported no price change and 52 per cent lower prices. "The market is now considered to be moving slowly with low levels of activity reported for what is traditionally one of the busiest times of the year," the institution says. Realistic pricing, which means reduced prices, continued to be a key factor for renewing confidence.

Peter Miller, national housing market spokesman, said both seller and buyer had to remember that the vast majority of people moved within a 10-mile radius and, therefore, within a local market. "A seller who reduces the price of his house to sell can purchase very competitively in today's market and will secure good value."

Labour demands more help for wind power firms

By NICK NUTTALL, TECHNOLOGY CORRESPONDENT

MANY promising clean energy schemes are being undermined by delays and indecision, Labour said yesterday.

Rhodri Morgan, Labour's spokesman on renewable energy, said the government had promised to support wind parks and tidal barrages. Yet the energy department's target of having 1 per cent or 600 megawatts of Britain's electricity generated by such sources by 2000 had been thrown into chaos by a mixture of neglect and an enthusiasm for nuclear power.

He said the agency charged with overseeing contracts between 12 area boards and clean energy generators, had been consistently delayed. Long-term contracts, needed to attract financial backing, had been cut by a Brussels agreement.

Mr Morgan said Labour believed wind farms could be generating 600 megawatts by the end of the century. Instead, they were likely to be priced out of the market.

John Wakeham, the energy secretary, is expected to announce by next month which of 340 clean energy schemes have been approved as part of the non-fossil fuel obligation. They are likely to be paid up to a third more for their electricity than the 6p per kilowatt-hour limit the government had originally planned. Dr Peter Musgrove of the Wind Energy Group, a consortium including Taylor Woodrow and British Aerospace, said his and other groups had told the department their schemes would not work financially unless supply contracts were extended or a higher price was paid for the electricity. The price battle had been won.

Industry experts believe that fewer than five wind farms, generating a total of 30 megawatts will win eight-year supply contracts. Many others will be offered conditional contracts.

Mr Morgan urged the government to go back to the European Commission and argue for longer contracts. Renewable energy sources have been lumped in with nuclear power under the privatisation plan and the European Commission has ruled that long-term contracts for nuclear energy under which consumers would pay a levy to keep stations afloat, are against competition law.

Wind energy groups are also likely to seek a higher price after the non-fossil fuel obligation contracts expire. The government has said that approved projects will be treated on an equal footing with large generators, getting the average pool price, calculated at about 2.2p a kilowatt-hour. But wind farms say that is too low.

Paint shop strike hits Jaguar

One thousand workers were laid off at the Jaguar factory in Browns Lane, Coventry, yesterday because of a strike by paint shop workers at Castle Bromwich, Birmingham.

The halting of XJS and XJ6 production came as Jaguar hoped to profit from its first and second placings in the Le Mans 24-hour race at the weekend with a boom in orders. The 300 paint shop workers are objecting to new working arrangements.

Four terms

Schools in West Glamorgan are to be the first in Britain to introduce a four-term year, with each term lasting about 10 weeks. Education officials say the present uneven distribution of holidays creates planning difficulties.

Hosepipe ban

Bristol Water were placing a hosepipe ban on one million consumers from midday today after 500 million gallons of water was lost through a hole which appeared in the bed of the Gloucester and Sharpness canal last week.

Former MP dies

Ron Lewis, former Labour MP for Carlisle for 23 years, died yesterday, aged 81. Mr Lewis, a widower, successfully fought six general elections after he won the seat from the Conservatives in 1964.

No charges

Police released more than 230 people without charge yesterday after an acid house party in Thornes, Wakefield, was broken up on Sunday. Six people are on police bail while enquiries continue.

Pollution hotline

A drive to persuade the public to use an emergency hotline to report suspected pollution and poaching was launched in the southwest by the National Rivers Authority.

Superglue raid

Chris Bone, a supermarket manager, was doused in petrol and left superglued to a safe in Owsmoor, Berkshire, as a raider stole £6,000. It was two hours before he was rescued.

Teacher jailed

Avril Smerdon, a teacher aged 43, was jailed for 18 months at Norwich crown court for killing a Dutch tourist as she drove her car while drunk.

Young homeless greet hostel plan with seasoned scepticism

Michael Spicer: Went along on soup run

Michael Spicer, housing minister, will announce this week an initiative to help young people sleeping on the streets: initially they will be offered hostel places. Lin Jenkins spoke to the homeless, and those who help them, to gauge their reactions.

GARY Wayne pulled his sleeping bag tightly around his waist as he sat shivering in the rain in a doorway, ignored by passers-by too familiar with his state to cast a second glance.

At 19 his face has been one among London's army of homeless young people for almost five years. The government plans to provide people like Gary with temporary shelter, basic accommodation with adequate sanitation to remove them from their high profile existence on the streets.

He has other ideas. Home is presently the doorway of the Reed employment agency in the Strand. He did spend a few months with a girlfriend in a council flat, and has lived in squats.

"I started on the streets when my father threw me out, but I still managed to go to school and do my exams. Sometimes I get a job, but it is very difficult when you don't have an address. What I would most like is to get off the streets and get a steady job, but I'm not going to sleep in a hostel in the meantime," he said.

Those who work with the homeless predicted such a reaction. Temporary places to sleep will be unpopular with those who now shun available beds for a doorway or cardboard box. The lifestyle is deeply entrenched and has produced its own sub-culture.

The Salvation Army believes the hostels will not be popular. Mr Wayne, a regular customer of the Salvation Army's soup run, said he was aware of the number of empty hostel places each night in London.

"They offer you a place, but who wants to go there? It's full of tramps. Life on the streets isn't so bad."

With an income of £15 a day from begging, he uses the facilities in nearby day centres to keep clean and eats in cafes or at McDonald's.

"There are three options to survive. Prostitution, stealing or begging." John, aged 18, from Scotland, was critical of the government's initiative. "I would rather live on the streets. You can keep yourself cleaner than being in a hostel. Why do they think nobody uses the ones available already? Most of them are riddled with cockroaches and riddled with death. The rules are ridiculous and they are all run by dykes and queers."

In the sub-culture of street life, each band of "friends" is fiercely territorial. "We wouldn't want to be with any of those from cardboard city [the "Bull-ring" subway near the South Bank]. That's where tramps are tramps. A good wash would kill half of them that side of the water," John said.

Tuck Tucker, aged 18, came to London from Newcastle looking for work when his mother remarried nine months ago. He still finds his new life an adventure. "We won't just vanish into new hostels. They are smelly, and if you do not know the people then it can be dangerous. If the council would give us proper homes then we could work, or claim off the social. I spent some time in the Bull-ring, but it stinks. Too many people down there are crazy. It is safer in a doorway where people go past all night."

Those who have spent their spare time for years working at night with London's homeless have noticed a dramatic change in the past year or two. Where once the majority were middle-aged or older, drunks or mentally ill, many more are now young, sane and sober.

Raymond Dickinson, 46, has been a lay volunteer on the Salvation Army's soup run for 19 years. "The new younger element tend to stick together, whereas traditionally the homeless were loners. They spurn help, and are regulated through necessity, and lack privacy. They don't want to be institutionalised and prefer to stay in the streets." The Salvation Army is nearing the end of its own study into homelessness. Michael Spicer, the housing minister, visited their hostels and went on a soup run.

A count on one night last year found 753 people sleeping rough, and of them only seven were aged under 20. When the study is completed the army plans to modernise its ageing hostels.

Charles King, a Salvation Army spokesman, said: "A lot of those you find begging actually live in squats. When they ask me for money I tell them I can do better than that, I can get them a bed for the night, but they never want it."

"Hostels have rules, partly because they cater for a lot of mentally ill people who are institutionalised and feel happier with rules. There is also no drinking, which the youngsters don't like. To them the problem is not where to sleep at night. It how to get somewhere permanent to live, and get a job with a living wage."

Leading article, page 13
Views of street-wise, page 17

FOR ONCE, BMW AREN'T OFFERING YOU A SHINY NEW CAR.

You'd be fortunate to find a new mass produced car that had the same shine as the one above.

In fact, this car is an Approved Used BMW that's covered 13,000 miles since it left the factory.

Being a BMW, its bodyshell and panels are pressed from the highest quality steel. Areas that are likely to get stone-chipped are galvanised with zinc.

16 kilogrammes of PVC sealer are applied for good measure. And finally it undergoes a 46-stage painting process. A lengthy process, perhaps, but then the results reflect that.

To check the quality during production, selected cars are put through the salt-spraying test. All 480 hours of it.

But BMW beauty, contrary to the saying, is a lot more than skin deep.

The chassis and the suspension are tested for durability on BMW's Dynamic Test Rig. This machine simulates every bump and twist of the infamous Nurburgring race track.

Every Approved Used BMW also has a computer that continually monitors engine speed, mileage and temperature.

Then, via the Service Interval Indicator, it tells the driver exactly when the car needs servicing.

Making it likely that the car will have been maintained correctly throughout its life. It also has to undergo a rigorous multi-point check, carried out by the person who best knows a BMW.

A highly trained Technician.

Such attention to detail enables BMW to confidently give a warranty that covers most mechanical and electrical parts.

A warranty that even covers hotel accommodation anywhere in Europe in the unlikely event of a breakdown.

Indeed one motoring magazine, 'Buying Cars,' described

Used BMWs as, "amongst the best made and most reliable cars in the world."

They concluded, "Frankly, the not-new BMW car is one of the best-value motoring propositions going."

Fill in the coupon, and BMW will gladly give you an even more desirable quote.

To: BMW Information Service, PO Box 46, Hounslow, Middlesex TW4 6NF.
Tel: 081-897 6665. Please send me a BMW Approved Used Car Information File and the name of my local dealer. AN/2/1/S/2

Mr Mrs, Miss etc		Initial		Surname		Address
Home Country		Post Code		Telephone		Age
Present Car		New Price		Age		Approved Used Car

BMW FINANCE AVAILABLE ON ALL APPROVED USED BMWs.

CBI leader says cash for Channel tunnel 'too little, too late'

A VISION of Britain plagued by traffic jams, ridiculed by the French and marginalised in Europe economically was painted yesterday by the director general of the Confederation of British Industry (CBI).

John Banham told the London conference of local authority associations that the "worst case scenario" was close to happening. "Too little investment, too late, to explore the potential — for the nation, not just the Southeast — of the single market and the Channel tunnel. Britain seems set to enter the 21st century with the worst transport infrastructure in northern Europe."

Mr Banham said the controversy over the fast rail link to the Channel tunnel should not obscure the wider picture. Members of the CBI were concerned about adequate road and rail links to the east and south coast ports, and to the tunnel from Scotland, the North, the Midlands, South Wales and the Southwest.

The priority of business was not to cut 20 minutes off the time of the journey from London to Folkestone, yet the dispute over the fast link showed the dangers of a British allergy to thinking about transport needs in the next century, Mr Banham said.

Time was running out as the amount of traffic continued to grow, with a 6 per cent increase in 1989 alone. Mr Banham called for a sustained increase in transport investment, largely from public funds. The planning system could be made faster by improving levels of compensation to those affected by new road or rail schemes.

He said that the prime minister recognised the need for an overhaul of the planning system and he was now awaiting action.

Earlier, Roger Freeman, the transport minister, had pledged that the government would work with local authorities to spread the benefits of the Channel tunnel across the country, but he rejected criticism from the Inter-Association Channel Tunnel group that "an historic opportunity was becoming an historic shambles".

John Prescott, Labour's transport spokesman, speaking at the conference, launched a sharp attack on government indecision and the postponement of the high-speed link. He said: "Lack of strategic planning means Britain will enter the 21st century with an inadequate 20th-century Channel tunnel link."

Mr Prescott called on the government to repeal section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Act, to allow public finance of the project. A commission of technical and other experts should work with British Rail to examine all possible route options, and report back in six months, he said. That would allow the government to make the political decision over the route of the future high-speed line.

Mr Prescott also suggested that Britain seek financial backing from the European Commission, which he said had reportedly agreed to give £200 million in assistance to the Belgian high-speed rail link.

Derek Bateman, chairman of the inter-association and a Cheshire councillor, said it was embarrassing to see how far the UK was falling behind European competition in linking up with the tunnel. He called for a more unified approach, with public resources to back the private sector.

Kyril Melnikov and Yelena Pankova, principal dancers with the Kirov Ballet, take a break from rehearsals at the Palace Theatre, Manchester, to go sight-seeing

Health service reform prompts concern over hospice funding

By A STAFF REPORTER

THE funding of the 120 charitable hospices which care for 40,000 dying patients a year in the United Kingdom is at risk under government health service reforms for contracting out patient services.

The hospices, many of which have some public funding, are worried that under the reforms, health authorities may decide they cannot afford to negotiate contracts with them for care for the dying.

Paul Rossi, secretary of the umbrella organization, Help the Hospices, said: "The future is very uncertain. Voluntary hospices will need to negotiate contracts with the health authorities who want to buy in terminal care. But a specialised service for the dying is not a cheap option. It is very high cost because it is so labour-intensive."

Even if health authorities do want to contract out care for the dying, he added, the voluntary hospices are in competition with the private sector and with hospice provision in the National Health Service. "There is always a danger that health authorities might be pushed to buy the cheapest, low cost option, which is not necessarily the best."

The voluntary hospice movement also faces the problem of its weak bargaining position. Dame Cicely Saunders, chairman of St Christopher's hospice in south London and founder president of Help the Hospices, said: "We are not going to be in a good position to fight for contracts because the health authorities will know that we won't ignore patients and will try to find the money somehow."

Most hospices, where on average a bed costs £700 a week, receive some support from local councils. The amount, though, varies from 2 per cent to 80 per cent of running costs. In general they are heavily dependent on gifts.

One such hospice, St Raphael's at Cheam, Surrey, next week launches an appeal to raise £1 million for a trust fund to give it a permanent income. The hospice, regarded as a model for the future because of its design and guiding ethos, relies on gifts for 85 per cent of its yearly running costs of over £600,000. Like other hospices, St Raphael's, which was set up in 1986, cares for in-patients and for those at home and provides training for medical staff in looking after the terminally ill.

David Macfarlane, chairman of the governing council, said: "The whole philosophy is to put the patients' needs first, everything is worked around that. But it costs an awful lot to run, and the government contributes so very little." There was a limit to how much hospices can depend on voluntary help.

Mr Rossi said the aim was to agree with health authorities to enter into contracts for equal funding. "In our view this gives them a jolly good bargain. In Scotland the government has said it will match 'pound for pound' money raised in the voluntary sector and we are hoping the same will apply in England and Wales, although at the end of the day, it is up to the health authorities."

Although the future of the hospices is uncertain, there is growing demand for their work. Mr Rossi said there was increasing emphasis on care for the dying in their own homes and a move to banish the idea of the hospice as "some kind of death-house".

Many people use hospices for short stays and then return home. "We want to get away from the image that you go in at the front door and only out in a van," he added.

In the next decade, Dame Cicely envisages expansion in all the hospices' main areas of care, research and teaching. Above all she wants more education about death and dying. "We should not just turn away from dying and bereaved people and isolate them. They are part of us."

Teenagers told to get streetwise

TEENAGERS were yesterday urged to become more streetwise in a manual approved by the government.

Youngsters should not be over-protected from dangers like bullying, crime and drugs, the Health Education Authority says in its handbook, Teenscape—A Personal Safety Programme For Teenagers. Instead, its author, Michele Elliott, a child psychologist, gives teenagers tips on defending themselves.

There is advice on dealing with indecent exposure: do not stand frozen but criticise aloud or walk away; muggers: learn self-defence moves, but do not resist handing over valuables if they have a knife; drink-drivers: do not accept lifts from them, arrange a telephone code with parents to avoid embarrassment if you need to be picked up; racial abuse: if a friend is abused, intervene when it is safe or call for help.

Ms Elliott, director of the children's charity Kidscape, said many teenagers were scared to tell parents about difficulties in case they were not let out again. A survey of 121 children aged 13 found 35 per cent had faced mugging, abuse or similar problems. Most had not told their parents. Boys often got into more difficulties than girls because of "macho" behaviour.

Ms Elliott said: "It is vital that we give teenagers some strategies. The world is not particularly safe for them. Teenagers are particularly vulnerable to attack by bullies and to the dangers of gambling, abuse and crime."

Dame Cicely: "Hospices in weak position to fight"

Teenscape—A Personal Safety Programme For Teenagers (Health Education Authority, £6.95)

Cot death charity launches appeal

By THOMSON PRENTICE, SCIENCE CORRESPONDENT

ONLY a fifth of the 2,000 cot deaths a year in Britain are properly investigated and most are treated simply as "closed books", a specialist said yesterday.

The Foundation for the Study of Infant Deaths called on the government to provide £100,000 for research into the causes of the deaths. All such cases should be investigated by paediatric pathologists, the charity said at the launch of its national cot death appeal week.

The foundation also wants confidential enquiries conducted into each death. Clinical investigations would be backed by a report on the circumstances in each case.

Richard Wilson, consultant paediatrician at Kingston Upon Thames hospital, Surrey, said: "If we want to stop babies dying we have to do this work. In the past we have just closed the book on these deaths. Once a coroner establishes that it is a cot death, that is the end of the matter. There is no duty on him to find out the reason why it happened. There is no detailed examination afterwards."

Each regional health authority has been told to appoint a paediatric pathologist by next April as part of a government initiative to support research into sudden infant deaths. Experts from the foundation will brief MPs at a meeting in London tomorrow. The charity hopes to raise £300,000 over the next five years to fund a new university research team. Only two universities, London and Liverpool, presently undertake work in the field.

Colin Baker the actor, who lost his first son, Jack, in a cot death seven years ago, helped launch yesterday's appeal. "I will never know why my son died at seven weeks of age. One way in which I made sense of Jack's death was to throw my weight behind cot death research to try to make sure other parents do not have to go through the same pain."

Specialists believe that a number of factors contribute to cot deaths and that there is no single cause. Most deaths occur between three and six months after birth. Studies have shown that up to 75 per cent of victims had some form of respiratory infection that could have caused breathing difficulties. The most vulnerable babies appear to be those born prematurely or of low birthweight, whose mothers are young and who have already had other children, but the risk factors are not fully understood.

TERMINAL THREE...REBORN

MORE STYLE

MORE CHECK-INS

MORE CHECK-OUTS

MORE SPACE

MORE INVESTMENT

MORE EXPERIENCE

Heathrow's Terminal 3 has been transformed. For the last four years work has been going on behind the scenes and while over six million passengers per annum used the terminal during this project, few were aware of what was happening. Now, everyone will appreciate the difference.

We have spent £110 million enlarging the terminal and creating a spacious new environment to give you a better standard of service. There are more check-in desks, a brand new computerised baggage handling system and a larger baggage reclaim hall to help speed your journey.

You can visit Europe's largest Duty and Tax Free store, browse among a range of quality shops or relax in calm, comfortable surroundings.

All this has been achieved without closing the terminal. In fact it has been one of the most sophisticated projects ever attempted on a building as complex as Terminal 3.

We at BAA have the experience and commitment to build Britain's airports for the future. And, as the reborn Terminal 3 shows, to keep them ahead of their competitors.

B.A.A.

Heathrow

The World's Premier International Airport

1501 661 4411

Harassment forcing HIV sufferers to move, says peer

PEOPLE suffering from HIV, the Aids virus, frequently have to move from one local authority to another because of harassment, Lord Kilmarnock, chairman of the all-party parliamentary group on Aids, told peers.

Speaking when the report stage of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill resumed, he listed examples which he described as "pretty harrowing".

In one instance, a young woman had returned to London with her boyfriend from the northeast after finding out she was HIV positive, but her family and friends would have nothing to do with her.

She moved into a squat in Brixton and confided her condition to a neighbour who then beat her and her boyfriend so badly they they needed hospital treatment.

She had not yet been rehoused by the local authority and was at present sleeping on "people's floors".

Lord Kilmarnock, an independent social democrat, said that another example concerned a couple living in a privately rented flat in West London. One with full blown Aids was extremely anxious and depressed. The landlady found out, started telling other tenants and, on one occasion, went on to the street and started broadcasting the fact.

In a further case, a woman lost her job when her employer discovered that she was HIV-positive after a breach of confidentiality by her general practitioner.

He said that the condition

HOUSE OF LORDS

encouraged some sufferers to give up drug taking. That led them open to pressure from pushers and other drug-users to continue the habit.

"This may drive them to other areas."

He later withdrew his amendment to the bill calling for "a portable assessment" of their needs, one which would apply in whichever local authority they became resident until the new authority was able to reassess their claim.

Lord Hesley, a social service minister, said the amendment was not practical. Continuity of service was important. However, it might not be possible for an existing service to be replicated.

Earlier, Lord Seabrook (Ind) moved an amendment which, he said, would require a local authority to consult with client and carer when undertaking an assessment of need.

He said that that would not place a duty on the local authority to carry out all the wishes of a person being assessed. But the principle that their views should have equal weight with those of the general practitioner and the community nurse would be established.

Social services departments were trying to escape from the charge that the "professional knows best".

Lady Sear (Lib Dem), supporting the amendment, said that it was of the greatest importance that the needs of the carer should be taken into account. Lord Carter (Lab) and Lord Mottistone (C) also offered support.

Lord Healey, however, said that the government did not think it necessary to place such a provision on the face of the bill.

Guidance on assessment and case management would make clear that the person concerned and any carer should be fully involved in the assessment of care needs and in the subsequent decision about the services to be provided.

Lord Seabrook said that he had found that an "airy fairy explanation" of the amendment was defeated by 107 votes to 87 - government majority, 20.

Later, Lord Allen of Abbeydale

(Ind) moved an amendment allowing central grants to voluntary groups providing community care services to people not "ordinarily resident" in the area. He said that the groups involved might be drug dependency units and projects working with the single homeless.

Lord Kilmarnock said that the Terrence Higgins Trust, which offers help to Aids patients, had to make 69 individual applications this year to councils and health authorities. Applications on such a scale were an immense strain.

Lady Blatch, for the government, said that the amendment would cut across the whole of the new community care arrangements. It was defeated by 101 votes to 94 - government majority, 7.

Mayhew rebukes Labour lawyer

THE JUDGES

THE "modern trend" of running down the legal system, and judges in particular, was condemned by Sir Patrick Mayhew, the Attorney-General.

Brian Sedgmore (Hackney South and Shoreditch, Lab), a barrister, asked if it was not true that the Maguire case was only one of a number of cases concerning the Irish issue in which the legal system had been "less than adequate".

Sir Patrick said that having invited Sir John May, the judge investigating the convictions of the Maguire Seven, to conduct his enquiry, he was not going to comment now on matters that might form the subject of his report.

He would like to comment, however, on "this modern trend to run down the British legal system and the judges in particular."

"In this country we have a legal system which is rightly admired and I think when the judges in particular are heavily and personally criticised and undermined, I believe this does great harm to our liberties and the freedom we live in."

Mr Sedgmore's friends, and unfortunately there were many of them, were inclined to undermine the reputation of the judges in particular in a way which he considered to be unfounded and damaging.

The Attorney-General agreed that he might be "slightly out of order" in what he had said, "but I wanted to get it off my chest".

John Marshall (Hendon South, C) said that if with the British system they could admit mistakes, could they look forward to the same from the Republic (of Ireland) in another Maguire case?

Sir Patrick: "I think I will pass on that point."

He added that in this country there was a procedure by which the home secretary could refer a case to the Court of Appeal if he believed that there were grounds for thinking the conviction unsafe or unsatisfactory. The Court of Appeal would then look at the matter as though it were a fresh appeal.

That seemed to be a wise and sensible procedure, bearing that institutions were fallible.

"If the home secretary thinks it right to refer the Maguire case to the Court of Appeal, the director will consider it right not to seek to uphold the safety of the conviction on the grounds he expressed through counsel."

John Fraser, shadow Attorney-General, said that, without casting aspersions on the judges, no matter how good the adversarial system might be in trials, when it came to appeals in these difficult cases it had been found to be wanting.

Sir Patrick replied that that fact was in the remit of Sir John May and if he sought evidence on that, his department would be only too happy to provide it.

King denies rift with Clark on spending cuts

REPORTS in the press of a rift in the defence ministry over cuts in spending were firmly denied by Tom King, the defence secretary.

Opening the annual two-day debate on the defence estimates, he accused journalists of clinging to the "conspiracy theory" and accused them of seeking to drive a wedge between him and Alan Clark, minister for defence procurement.

Mr King said that with Mr Clark's full authority he could say that they were "singularly unwedged". No matter how many times people were corrected, the media reports still longed to cling to the conspiracy theory. He did not mind that if it helped to sell papers, but if it damaged some members of the armed forces and they believed that some sort of secret, big plan was at work, it was important to deal with the matter.

DEFENCE

Before Christmas, Mr Clark had put before him on various matters, particularly on defence procurement, and he had arranged for the prime minister to see a copy for interest.

Since then, Mr Clark's interesting work, and that of others, had been carried forward in the work that ministers had been doing on "options for change". This difficult and important work had also involved the defence staff and the office of management and budgets.

The chief of staff had been involved and were aware of the details of the work, as they should be. He was sorry if he had "spelt out the implications of one or two journalists".

Since the last such defence debate, eight months ago, there had been important advances towards German unification, free elections in Hungary and Czechoslovakia and undoubted changes in Romania, although perhaps the situation there was less clear. Then there was the Soviet agreement that their forces would be out of Hungary and Czechoslovakia next year, and profound developments in the Soviet Union itself.

These remarkable changes brought challenges for Britain's armed forces.

He had always been conscious, in discussions with other defence ministers, including those from the Soviet Union, France, Germany and Italy, that having a conscript army was a different situation from Britain's position with volunteer services. In volunteer services, men made the forces their career and had a commitment and were concerned to know what the future might hold for them. He understood that concern.

Britain's armed forces had also faced the security threat, particularly in Germany. He appreciated their resolution and the efforts of the police and the security services, as well as the work of the police in other Nato countries, other European countries and in the United States. During recent events, arrests had made their contribution and there had been ever closer co-operation, while terrorists had dodged backwards and forwards across borders.

Not the least of the problems facing the armed forces were difficulties over the budget for this year. The defence select committee had challenged him on that and he had told it of the problems caused by the impact of inflation which was costing £350 million this year. He now had reason to expect that the problem was likely to be rather worse than that.

He had therefore introduced a bar on most new commitments while an examination was being made of the savings which could be made in this year's expenditure.

"I have now set in train short-term changes at the margin of the defence programme to reduce expenditure. These have now been largely decided."

These measures should allow a general restraint on new commitments to be eased by the end of the year. Each new commitment would be scrutinized to ensure the department stayed within the cash allocation for the current year.

The Warsaw Pact had, to all intents and purposes, ceased to exist and it was difficult to see any conventional attack of any strategic size by the Soviet Union across Nato territory.

None the less, it was advisable to be cautious. A new nuclear submarine was launched every six weeks in the Soviet Union, two aircraft, six tanks and one missile were produced every day.

It had to be accepted that the present intention was that this weaponry would not be used. "But we should never forget in looking at our own defensive arrangements the reality that the situation can change and it can change in a situation in which the armaments remain."

"The armed services are now facing a period of tight constraint because there is significant pressure on defence expenditure and there will be a significant reduction of over 3 per cent in real terms this year."

He added: "By the end of this year we could, if all goes well, have in place some of the most far reaching changes in European defence and security we have witnessed since Nato was established."

Even if all present hopes were fulfilled, the essential defensive core would have to remain, including an independent nuclear deterrent, because conventional weapons alone would not deter war. The United Kingdom would also need adequate forces to meet commitments in the world outside Europe.

It might be necessary to reduce forces stationed in Germany in the context of successful arms control negotiations and changes in Nato strategy.

"Obviously this is one of the main areas we are looking at, covering not only the four divisions of the British Army of the Rhine (BAOR), but also the RAF in Germany."

Martin O'Neill, chief Opposition spokesman on defence, said that the hard anti-German position of the prime minister had caused her to lose sight for some time of the strategic implications of what was happening in Eastern Europe. Britain had yet to show any form of leadership or any sign of new thinking. Mrs Thatcher was still saying that we needed to keep nuclear weapons up to date.

With the coming cuts in defence spending, he said, he did not see the present structural structure being relevant in its present form to the strategic needs of the army. That would have consequences for recruitment, but if nothing was done the army would have more chiefs than Indians, more officers than non-commissioned men.

"I would imagine that the nature of the cuts which will come and will be introduced before the general election will have an impact on cap badges and the regimental structure which will require Conservative MPs to think and think hard."

There was wide agreement that the shape of the hulls of future naval vessels did not matter much, but the hardware that was placed in them did.

"We are in a position to look at less complicated systems for a less demanding range of duties than we had in the past."

He hoped that, as they would need to be less complicated, the systems would also be less expensive for the remaining years of the century.

The Labour party in the past might have exaggerated the attractiveness of defence cuts to the electorate, but as the perceived threat diminished in the public mind, their willingness to fund costly defence expenditure would also diminish.

There was excessive secrecy at the ministry about cuts. Other countries made more information available on the subject.

"I have secreted in the government on a number of matters on this question prevent us coming out with clear and detailed statements that the public should require, not only from the Opposition, but, more important, from the government."

Roland Boyes (Houghton and Washington, Lab) at Westminster yesterday for the launch of his book, People in Parliament. The book is a collection of photographs taken in and around Parliament over the past two years. Ministers and MPs, as well as many of those who work behind the scenes, such as caterers, secretaries and doorkeepers are included (published and distributed by Kodak and Hasselblad (UK); £24.95)

Conditions for CS gas set out

BATON rounds and CS gas are to be used by the police only as a last resort when conventional methods of containing serious public disorder have been tried and have failed, MPs were told in a Commons written reply.

Peter Lloyd, a Home Office under secretary, said: "CS or baton rounds are to be used only with the express authority of the chief officer of police (or in his absence his deputy) under the direction and control of a designated senior officer, and by trained police officers."

They would be used "only as a last resort where conventional methods of policing have been tried and failed, or must from the nature of the circumstances be unlikely to succeed if tried; and where there is risk of loss of life, or serious injury (or widespread destruction of property such that there is, or is judged to be, a sufficiently serious risk of loss of life or serious injury to justify the use of baton rounds or CS); and where the use of CS and baton rounds is judged as necessary because it is likely to reduce the risk."

"An oral warning is to be given to the crowd to disperse before CS or baton rounds are used. Once the use of baton rounds has begun, the need to continue use is to be assessed continuously. Particular caution is to be taken over the use of baton rounds for offensive purposes."

"If a chief officer is not present at the scene, he must be satisfied from reports that the criteria for use set out above have been met. In such circumstances, before the chief officer's authority for use is put into effect, a designated senior officer should satisfy himself at the scene that the criteria are met."

"Only CS equipment and baton rounds and launchers of a type authorised by the Home Office are to be used for these purposes."

The following police forces in England and Wales hold CS gas: Avon and Somerset, Bedfordshire, City of London, Cleveland, Derbyshire, Durham, Dyfed-Powys, Essex, Greater Manchester, Gloucestershire, Humberside, Kent, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Merseyside, Metropolitan, Norfolk, North Wales, Nottinghamshire, South Yorkshire, Staffordshire, Sussex, Warwickshire, West Midlands, and Wiltshire.

DPP asks police to enquire further into Murrell case

THE director of public prosecutions has asked the police to pursue further lines of enquiry into the case of the late Hilda Murrell, Sir Patrick Mayhew, Attorney-General, said during Commons questions.

He said that he had no immediate plans to discuss the case with the DPP, who had received a report from the West Mercia police which he had considered. "He has suggested further lines of enquiry. I do not doubt that he will consult with me if necessary."

He declined to comment or to

"name names" when Mr Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow, Lab) asked, in view of a letter Sir Patrick had received from Commander Robert Grant, Miss Murrell's nephew, exactly what would happen next.

[Miss Murrell died aged 78 in 1984 and later that year Mr Dalyell said that she had died after disturbing burglars who might have been looking for documents about the Falklands war. He also said the intruders might have been members of the security services.]

Sir Patrick: The DPP has suggested further lines of enquiry to the police but he can be entirely confident that the DPP will give the fullest weight to all concerns that properly arise in this matter.

Mr Derek Conway (Shrewsbury and Atcham, C) said that Miss Murrell had been one of his constituents and he welcomed the news that the enquiry was still to be pursued, but so far there was not a shred of evidence other than ill informed rumour to suggest that the security services had been involved.

Talks on Welsh steel plant

Welsh Development Agency officials have been exploring with United Engineering Steels (UES) possible options for the future of the Brynbo steelworks in North Wales, which UES has announced it is to close.

David Hunt, Welsh secretary, said during Commons questions that he had asked the agency to make the approach.

Barry Jones, chief Opposition spokesman on Wales, said it was a grave comment on industrial prospects that this excellent steelworks was "being hawked around the embassies of the world for a buyer".

Electrocution case move

Sir Patrick Mayhew, the Attorney-General, is to ask the Director of Public Prosecutions to look at the case of Paul Elvin, electrocuted on a site at Euston station in November 1988.

The Health and Safety Executive had concluded that there was not sufficient evidence for a manslaughter prosecution against British Rail. Sir Patrick said that he would make the request to the DPP without the slightest indication that he disagreed with the Health and Safety Executive.

Lease law

Plans to reform the law on leases have been delayed because the work of preparing draft legislation is taking longer than originally expected, Sir Patrick Mayhew, Attorney-General, said in a Commons written reply.

Parliament today

Commons (2.30): Questions: Defence; prime minister. Conclusion of debate on defence estimates.

Lords (2.30): Environmental Protection bill, committee, first day.

Correction

David Mellor, minister of state, Home Office, should have been reported on June 15 as expressing the hope that an opportunity would be found to amend the law on Sunday trading without too much delay; not that an opportunity would be found.

Labour discusses EC central bank

By RICHARD FORD
POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

RAPID moves towards a centralised European monetary management involving a central bank with responsibility for monetary policy will be discussed by senior front bench Labour politicians next week.

The proposals for the next stage of the Delors plan would remove control of monetary policy from national central banks to a European central bank and the creation of a central monetary authority with authority to conduct monetary policy.

Responsibility for much regional, environmental and structural policy would shift to the community, part of the social welfare system would be centralised and the European currency unit (Ecu) would be established as a trading currency as important as the dollar and yen.

Swift moves to a centralised monetary system form the key proposals for economic and monetary union that will be discussed in talks on Monday involving Labour European MPs and opposition spokesmen on trade and industry, employment and the Treasury.

The plans are outlined in a discussion paper prepared by Professor Terry Ward for the socialist group of the European parliament. It suggests that the governor of any new central bank would be questioned every three months by a parliamentary committee and says central bankers should agree principles for the conduct of budgetary policy.

The report also recommends the transfer of responsibility for much regional, structural and environmental policy to community level and the centralisation of parts of the social welfare system, including minimum levels of unemployment pay.

As Labour's European MPs prepare to discuss the proposals, the party admitted that it still had to convince the electorate that its embrace of the European Community was a fundamental and lasting change from the hostility espoused a decade ago.

Glyn Ford, leader of the British group of Labour European MPs, said the party still had a job to do to educate the electorate about Labour's commitment to the community.

He said the shift in Labour's position was seen as being "fairly deep and fundamental" in Europe, but the party still had to work in the United Kingdom to ensure the voters recognised it as such. "I am not sure it has penetrated the government's electorate. It would be better if it had and when it does we will do even better," Mr Ford said on the first anniversary Labour's success in the European elections.

In the early Eighties the party was committed to withdrawal from the EC, but since then there has been a big change, with Labour emphasising that Britain must play a positive role in shaping the future of the community.

Mr Ford was cautious on the party's attitude towards stages two and three of the Delors plan. "We want to use stages two and three as a basis for discussion. The most important thing is to get in the exchange-rate mechanism of the European monetary system. The details of stages two and three must be worked out."

THE GUIDE TO PERSONAL FINANCIAL SECURITY

Free

Thoroughbred advice.

It's yours for the asking.

Most of us would like the feeling of being financially secure.

But few know how to plan for security.

That's why you need the Black Horse Guide. Free, with our compliments.

It shows how financial planning can help. Ensuring you pay no more tax than you need. Revealing opportunities to add to your savings.

Protecting you from the financial consequences of any of life's misfortunes.

But you will need to plan with care, perhaps with the assistance of some expert advice. If so, a consultant will be only too happy to chat things over at a time and place to suit you.

The Black Horse Guide to Personal Financial Security is yours for the asking.

Send the coupon today. Or phone our Helpline on 0634 834308.

Black Horse Financial Services

Send this FREEPOST coupon now to: Simone Fuller, Black Horse Financial Services, FREEPOST, Chatham, Kent ME4 4BR. (NO STAMP NEEDED)

Please send me your free booklet, "The Guide To Personal Financial Security."

I am a Lloyds Bank Customer ☐ YES/NO ☐ If yes please add bank sort code number

(You will find this in the top right hand corner of your cheque book)

Name (Mr/Mrs/Miss/Ms)

Address

Postcode

Tel No. (Work)

(Home)

TMY 15A

FROM CHRISTOPHER WALKER IN BUCHAREST

The frightened wife of one opponent of the ruling National Salvation Front said: "It

FROM MICHAEL BINYON
IN LUXEMBOURG

● BENEVOLE: More than 500 Romanian World Cup soccer fans asked the Italian authorities for political asylum yesterday. About 80 other Romanians have asked that their visas be extended beyond the end of the tournament. (Reuter)

Alexander Lilov, left, Socialist leader, and Andrei Lukanov, prime minister, visiting the tomb of Georgi Dimitrov, a former leader, on the 108th anniversary of his birth

From KEUTER IN SOELA

The remaining two seats are held by the non-Marxist Social Democratic Party and another independent candidate.

FROM SUSAN ELICOTT IN WASHINGTON

The New York Times reported yesterday that the director of the agency recently went one step further by drafting plans for a shift in the organisation's activities to eavesdropping on world trade and financial dealings.

FROM MARY DEJEVSKY IN MOSCOW

According to Mr Girenko yesterday, possible candidates include Mr Ryzhkov, Vadim Bakatin, the interior minister, and Yuri Manayenkov, the central committee secretary. Both Mr Ryzhkov and Mr Bakatin were nominated for the Soviet presidency in March but declined to stand

FROM ANATOL LIEVEN IN VILNIUS

Mrs Prunskiene's departure, accompanied by Romualdas Ozalas, her deputy, means that parliament here cannot discuss her proposed moratorium on Lithuania's declaration of independence before she returns on Friday at the earliest.

In fact, it is more likely that of months Soviet negotiators in Vienna have been dragging their feet, pending the outcome of the "two plus four" discussions. Following the last two sessions between Herr Genscher and Mr Shevardnadze, it seems certain that the Vienna talks will accelerate to produce agreement by the late autumn, clearing the way for the CSCE summit.

FROM IAN MURRAY
IN BONN

FROM PETER GREEN IN PRAGUE

In retribution for the assassination, the Germans had earlier razed to the ground the town of Lidice, about 25 miles from Prague and in no apparent way connected to the assassination. The 199 men of Lidice were lined up and shot, and the town's women and children were sent to concentration camps. Czechoslovak historians say that, in addition to the inhabitants of Lidice and Lezaky, another town whose population was massa-

A veteran aged 72, war

FROM ANNE MCELVOY IN EAST BERLIN

The Volkskammer, evidently carried away by the first attendance of Chancellor in the heady early days of East German democracy, its leader, Hans-Wilhelm Ebeling, relief back to the more predictable parliamentary sessions held in Bonn.

Tributes to de Gaulle raise painful questions

FROM PHILIP JACOBSON IN PARIS

WITH his famous indifference to public opinion and undisguised distaste for France's classe politique, Charles de Gaulle would surely have derived a certain wry amusement from the pomp and ceremony with which yesterday's 50th anniversary of his rallying call to the nation has been invested.

Nobody knew better than he that only a tiny handful of the French were tuned in to the BBC when he called on them to resist the Nazi occupation and to have faith in his determination to redeem the nation's honour.

Nor did the French exactly flock to the colours de Gaulle had raised in exile: by some accounts, only five people from the sizeable French community then in Britain were moved to volunteer their services the day after the broadcast. In his own country, already sunk in the morass of defeat that led so swiftly to collaboration, the Pétain administration put in place by a damning majority of elected French parliamentarians (569 out of 666 deputies) would soon condemn him to death for high treason.

So while the wreaths were being laid and the memorial plaques dedicated, and Paris was en fête along the Seine last night for the capital's lavish celebrations of June 18, 1940, the unanswered question was what Gaullism really means in France today.

By a bitter irony, the man who has succeeded most effectively in wrapping himself in the tricolour and the values traditionally associated with de Gaulle is none other than Jean-Marie Le Pen. In the hands of the National Front, patriotism, the primacy of national sovereignty and the institutions of the Fifth Republic installed by de Gaulle have been perverted into a narrow and menacing nationalism which appears to strike an increasingly resonant chord among the ordinary French.

Cashing in on the demoralisation and chronic disarray of the self-proclaimed heirs of Gaullism — Jacques Chirac and the RPR party he leads — M Le Pen has stolen so much ground from the Gaullists that one wing of the RPR now proposes to fight him on his own dangerous territory. What the general would have made of M Le Pen — whose claims to have been a teenage Resistance hero are less than universally accepted — we can only guess.

After he retired to Colombey-les-Deux-Églises, de Gaulle wrote, with characteristic modesty, of being France's providential man, thrown up by a great crisis to preserve something precious in the French nation. That "certain idea of France", one can say with some assurance, does not correspond with M Le Pen's intolerant and bullying vision of the future.

As for M Chirac, who never ceases to proclaim his lineal descent from the general, less than 20 per cent of the electorate saw enough similarity to vote for him in the last presidential elections. In the cutting judgement of André Fontaine, the distinguished editor of Le Monde, voters acted on "the contrast between the record of what de Gaulle actually did and what now remains of Gaullism as a political fault".

Then we have François Mitterrand, whose early assessment of the powers de Gaulle awarded himself under the Fifth Republic was that it amounted to "a permanent coup d'état". One has heard rather less about that dictatorship in the 10 years that President Mitterrand has been in the Elysée Palace, and the Socialists have slipped effortlessly into Gaullist clothes where France's sacred right of nuclear self-defence is concerned (M Mitterrand's brilliant success at convincing the French of his Gaullist credentials naturally infuriates M Chirac and the RPR faithful).

Appropriately, among the millions of words printed in the French press on the present celebrations (which will be followed in November by the centenary of de Gaulle's birth and the 20th anniversary of his death), it was left to the astringent and irreverent Le Monde columnist, Claude Sarraute, to pose the most awkward questions. "How many of us heard that inspired appeal... and how many arose to respond to it? You could count them on one hand here, while in Vichy four million Pétainists prostrated themselves before this senile old man who laid the country beneath the German boot."

Radio traffic: Parisian drivers making their way around a giant replica of a radio relaying de Gaulle's wartime messages in Place de la Concorde yesterday, as France marked the 50th anniversary of his call to arms from London

EC clears stage for meeting on political union

FROM MICHAEL BINYON IN LUXEMBOURG

EUROPEAN Community foreign ministers yesterday cleared the way for an inter-governmental conference on political union this year, approving a detailed list of questions that must be considered by EC leaders at their summit in Dublin next week.

The discussions, together with those on economic and monetary union, were marked by a noticeably more flexible and enthusiastic participation by Britain, despite the government's doubts on the need for inter-governmental conferences on both issues. Douglas Hurd, the foreign secretary, persuaded his colleagues to look seriously at most of the problems first raised by Britain. Spokesmen for other ministers said he had not attempted any blocking measures.

Their report said political union had four main aims: to strengthen the community's capacity to take decisions, to make it more democratically responsive, to make its institutions more efficient, and to outline a common foreign and security policy.

They said any other European state that accepted the community's final goals could become a member. But in deepening political integration, several key questions had to be settled. The first was the scope of change: how much more responsibility should be transferred to the community, how would the notion of EC citizenship with specific rights be worked out, and how much joint co-operation should there be on such issues as the fight against drugs and in the political and judicial area.

Leaders would also have to discuss changes in existing institutions, and the role of the Council of Ministers. The conference must also look at democratic accountability — how much extra power should be given to the European parliament, and how should national parliaments be more involved?

On European monetary union, the ministers' discussions were overshadowed by an outburst from Jacques Delors, president of the commission, who appeared irritated by calls for further preparation and talk of a possible "two-speed Europe".

He rejected the suggestions and also attacked those who said there should be no links between the conferences on monetary and political union. The two, he insisted, should run in parallel.

Massacre of students confirmed

Kinshasa — A Zaire parliamentary commission yesterday confirmed that a masked commando unit last May entered Lubumbashi University by night and massacred students with the blessing and connivance of local authorities.

Some reports say as many as 150 students died, their throats cut with knives and bayonets, when the commandos got into the university late at night after the electric power was cut off. The parliamentary report was unable to say exactly how many students had died, partly because its investigation did not begin until three weeks after the killings on the night of May 11.

The report said the attack was "premeditated and meticulously prepared". It said three student informers from Equateur, President Mobutu's home province, persuaded the authorities to launch the attack after they had been unmasked by students and beaten. (AP)

Soviet pilot flees to Turkey

Ankara — A Soviet pilot yesterday landed a small passenger plane on a beach on Turkey's Black Sea coast and asked for political asylum, a government official said here. Requesting anonymity, the official said the pilot was alone in the 12-seater aircraft when it landed near Kumcagiz village in Kocaeli province at 1:30 pm.

Tass, the Soviet news agency, reported yesterday that an AN2 plane was hijacked in the Ukrainian port of Odessa. No other details were given. (AP)

Unhappy debtor kills up to six

Jacksonville — A gunman killed as many as six people at a Florida finance company yesterday, police said. A local radio station reported that the man later took his own life. The local radio report said the gunman was apparently unhappy about having his car repossessed. "There's a multiple shooting and our people are at the scene," a police spokesman said. (Reuter)

Collor falls short of cutback target

FROM LOUISE BYRNE IN RIO DE JANEIRO

PRESIDENT Collor de Mello of Brazil failed to meet his own deadline yesterday for naming 360,000 public workers to be dismissed as a crucial part of his economic plan.

Ministries announced the dismissal of about 100,000 workers, but fell short of the target, which would cut back the civil service by up to 30 per cent.

The failure to cut public spending is the latest setback for Senhor Collor, who completes 100 days in office on Friday. Inflation has been reduced from more than 70 per cent a month but is still at double figures. The planned sale of public companies has had to be postponed and a wave of strikes shows increasing opposition from workers.

One of the first measures to be implemented in the economic austerity plan, announced when the president took office in March, was the freezing of up to 80 per cent of savings in bank accounts. However, much of that money is now back in circulation.

Senhor Collor is expected to admit he has fallen short of his planned targets in a speech on national television and radio on Friday. But he will emphasise that the battle to reform the public service has at least begun. Jobs have been cut and more than 30 state companies have been closed.

Analysts believe the government will only be able to dismiss 120,000 of the 1.6-million public servants.

Administrative reform is crucial to Brazil's economic recovery. Plans introduced under the Sarney government also foundered on the failure to cut back government spending. Senhor Collor promised he would not fall into the same trap.

Olivetti CP486

NOW.

The first Computing Platform.
Simple as a PC.
Powerful as a mini.
Universal as a standard.

Olivetti's new CP486 combines the power of a mini-computer with the simplicity of a PC.

The CP486 provides the link between existing mini-computers and PC networks, merging these 'worlds'.

As a mini-computer, the CP486 can provide computing power for up to 50 users. It can also give you the speed that will run the most complex software faster than any PC has ever run before.

It can also power networks at a lower cost per terminal than most other computers.

Olivetti Systems & Networks customers are supported by their own "Systems Partners". This means that whatever your business, you'll have a 'partner' that understands your needs.

They'll help you develop an 'open' system so that the CP486 can integrate with, or replace your existing equipment.

If you've been waiting for the right solution to your computer problems, the CP486 is available right NOW.

Call Justine Holland on 081-785-6666 or send this coupon to her at: Olivetti Systems and Networks, 86-88 Upper Richmond Road, Putney, London SW15 2UR.

Name _____
Position _____ Company _____
Address _____
Postcode _____ Telephone _____

Our force is your energy

olivetti

Tamil rebels face all-out war launched by Colombo

From James Pringle in Ampara, Sri Lanka

REFUGEES were fleeing from villages along Sri Lanka's eastern coast yesterday as the Sri Lankan Army and militant Tamil separatists prepared for what a government minister described as "all-out war".

"The ceasefire in the north-east has been abandoned," said Ranjan Wijeratne, minister of defence, referring to the failure of the second ceasefire in a week. "The northeast of the country is in a situation of all-out war and military commanders have been given authority to use any operational measures necessary to defeat the guerrillas," Mr Wijeratne added.

Moving in small, highly mobile groups, fighters of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, some as young as 14, were entering villages in the east of the country and attacking police stations while firing rockets and mortars into army camps. In one case, soldiers claim an unidentified gas was used against them.

As the Sri Lankan Army was rushing reinforcements, including new armoured personnel carriers and scout cars, to the front, sources in Tiger-controlled areas said some fresh guerrilla troops were arriving by sea from the northern Jaffna peninsula, the main Tamil heartland.

Up to 15,000 refugees have fled the war zone and are seeking shelter in schools and government buildings here, local officials said. The northeastern town of Trincomalee is back in government hands, but sources said much of it had been destroyed by fire. They said the Tigers had evacuated up to 20,000 Tamil residents before the Sri Lankan Army entered.

Police and civilian vigilantes were said to have seized 37 Tamils, some of whom had been sheltering at Trincomalee hospital, and had taken them away for questioning amid fears that widespread revenge killings — even a pogrom against Tamils — may begin.

Military sources here said 1,000 policemen had surrendered and that some may have been murdered, though the Tigers have denied it.

Fleeing Sinhalese and Tamil Muslim civilians said they had lost confidence in the police. "They are throwing down their arms and running away in the face of the Tigers," one refugee said.

Some Sinhalese villagers here say they were opposed to a ceasefire in the first place. "If the army stops fighting, the terrorists will come into our village," a shopkeeper said in Huana near here. A platoon of Tigers had been reported just over a mile away, he said.

Heavy fighting resumed on Sunday less than 24 hours after a ceasefire went into effect on Saturday night. The separatists said fighting, which is also occurring in the Jaffna peninsula, had resumed because the army had made "large-scale troop movements." The army for its part accused the Tigers of "unprovoked attacks".

The fields east of here are devoid of human life, and the villages deserted except for abandoned dogs. The villagers are fleeing with cattle and chickens.

Colombo-based diplomats were speculating why the Tigers had launched attacks at this time, especially in the east of Sri Lanka, where they have about 3,000 fighters, many very young. "It was either a gamble or a blunder," one diplomat said. "The Tigers had everything going their way in negotiations with the government and now they seem to have thrown it away. I cannot see how anyone can cobble together a political solution at this stage."

Sources here confirmed the initial trouble began a week ago when a Muslim tailor who made uniforms for the Tigers in Batticaloa, a Tamil-held town on the coast, had an affair with a Sinhalese man's wife. The husband got into a fight with the tailor, who was taken to the police station and beaten up. Tigers then entered the police station to rescue the tailor and ended by abducting two policemen. Military sources here said some fighting ensued. Tigers then raided more than 20 other police stations, taking money and weapons. In some cases they abducted police, who were shot.

The government and the Tigers had been talking for more than a year over measures that would give Tamils more autonomy in the north-east, where in many places they are in a majority. Under the terms of a truce in effect since May last year, the Tigers moved freely in the northeast while troops and police stayed in barracks. Police and army found this humiliating.

Meanwhile, there were unconfirmed reports from army sources that 40 government paratroops were feared dead after they jumped from an aircraft over what they thought was an army camp but which was a Tiger camp.

Food and medical supplies were running low at two other army camps surrounded by the guerrillas, who have refused to allow wounded soldiers to be evacuated.

The order to use "any operational measures necessary" will suit army officers who complained that the ceasefire tied their hands when they were about to take the initiative.

The Tigers are now in a conventional war and could suffer as a result, diplomats in Colombo said. "It is difficult to understand how they allowed themselves to get into this position," one said.

First-year women students leave Peking university yesterday for two weeks of military training in Hebei province

The best and brightest flee China

From Catherine Sampson in Peking

IT WAS a sad day for China's Central Ballet Troupe when the audience walked out and demanded their money back. Not because the dancing was bad but because there was not enough of it: there were too few ballerinas on stage.

More than 100 dancers, it transpired, had tipped off to the West. For as the brightest and best are leaving Hong Kong in anticipation of the Chinese takeover in 1997, there is a parallel flow of talent from the mainland.

As in Hong Kong, the mainland brain drain started long before the June 4 massacre but has been exacerbated by it and is now eroding an entire generation of artistic and academic skills.

In Hong Kong, the root cause is anxiety about a future under a regime unfriendly to capitalism. In China, the cause is misery in the present tense state, caused not only by an ideologically imposed creative straitjacket but by massive underfunding of the arts and academia.

The Peking-backed paper which reported the ballet troupe was so short of money that it could only afford to keep putting on the same old show, Swan Lake, night after night. As a result, some 130 ballet dancers had left the troupe since 1978, when China began to open its doors to the West.

Similarly, nearly 400 musicians had left the Central Philharmonic Orchestra and Central Conservatory of Music. As for sports, there are 100 Chinese professional table-tennis players in Japan and 20 in West Germany, according to an article which accused them of blindly worshipping money.

Students, too, see only a bleak future in China. One Western embassy reported a yearly 100 per cent increase in the number of university students applying for visas. In these circumstances, a diplomat said, the increase in visa applications after June 4 was in keeping with the general trend — it should be seen as "substantial but not unusual".

The most poignant symbol of despair came recently when Xu Jiahou — China's ambassador in Hong Kong for years, whose job it was to reassure the people of Hong Kong that it was worth staying — himself fled to the United States, where he is "resting" indefinitely. While the preferred destinations are the United States, Canada and Australia, visa applicants are prepared to consider anywhere that will take them. Even a less than ideal primary destination can act as a stepping-stone to other countries. The first objective is to leave China.

The number of Chinese restaurants, for instance, in Malta has more than doubled since last June — a phenomenon put down to the increased number of Chinese students in Malta working their way through college in the way they know best.

Splits appear in Israel coalition

From Richard Owen in Jerusalem

DAVID Levy, the new Israeli foreign minister, clashed with Yitzhak Shamir, the prime minister, over the Middle East peace process and control of Israeli foreign policy yesterday, revealing the first cracks in the week-old right-wing coalition government.

Mr Levy was reported to be furious that Mr Shamir had issued statements construed by the United States and Egypt as hardline without referring to the foreign ministry. An unrepentant Mr Shamir yesterday launched further initiatives, inviting President Assad of Syria for talks in Israel and at the same time calling on America to end its dialogue with the Palestine Liberation Organisation because of recent Palestinian terrorist attacks on Israel.

Syria ignored the invitation and has joined other Arab states in declaring that right-wing Israeli policies are bringing the Middle East to the brink of another war.

Disagreements also emerged in the Israeli leadership over Soviet Jewish immigration, with senior officials opposing a demand by Ariel Sharon, the flamboyant housing minister and former war hero, for exclusive powers over immigration.

Uri Gordon, head of the Jewish Agency's immigration department, accused the new government of endangering a further influx of Soviet Jews by failing to make clear that it was discouraging new immigrants from settling in the occupied territories.

Mr Levy, aged 52, has been labelled a hawk on the Palestinian issue over the past year. In the previous Likud-Labour coalition, in which he was minister of housing and deputy prime minister, Mr Levy joined the headline Mr Sharon in imposing constraints on Mr Shamir's plan for Palestinian elections, thus in effect undermining it.

Mr Levy also supported ultra-nationalist Jewish settlers in the West Bank and, to US dismay, secretly channelled government money to Jewish militants who took over St John's Hospice, a Christian property in Jerusalem's Old City. Mr Levy has also made no secret of his ambition to succeed Mr Shamir as prime minister.

Yesterday officials emphasised that foreign ministers tended to become more flexible when confronted with the realities of world diplomacy. A Moroccan Jew by origin, and hence idolised by Israel's poor but influential Sephardi community, Mr Levy is seen as the new face of an Israel which has steadily become more Middle Eastern and less European. He speaks almost no English in contrast to the European-born or Americanised Israelis who have traditionally formed Israel's elite.

Mr Levy spent several days in hospital last week after suffering a mild heart attack, reportedly as a result of being exhausted by the intensive coalition negotiations.

Yesterday, however, he made his presence felt, letting it be known that he intended to visit Washington and also that he wanted to have talks with President Mubarak of Egypt. Israeli newspapers said Mr Levy had instructed foreign ministry officials to withhold a message to Mr Mubarak because it had not been co-ordinated with him.

Mr Levy was also said to be unhappy that Mr Shamir had appeared to reject out of hand the American proposal for an Israeli-Palestinian dialogue in Cairo.

Mr Shamir addressing school students at Petah Tikva, near Tel Aviv, yesterday

Cambodia hopes fade as fighting flares up again

From Neil Kelly in Bangkok

HOPES of a ceasefire in Cambodia are receding as warring factions in the country raise the tempo of military operations.

After a three-hour battle on Sunday guerrillas of the Khmer Rouge and the army of Prince Sihanouk, the resistance leader, captured the strategically important provincial capital of Kompong Thom, 60 miles north of Phnom Penh, from government forces.

A spokesman for the guerrillas said they later withdrew to the outskirts of the city "for security reasons" and to safeguard the civilian population of about 50,000.

Both this operation and fighting in several other areas are putting in jeopardy the ceasefire agreement between the Phnom Penh government, headed by Hun Sen, the prime minister, and the non-communist resistance groups, namely Prince Sihanouk's forces and the Khmer People's National Liberation Front.

The truce was agreed during a meeting in Tokyo earlier this month. The non-communist factions agreed not to initiate military operations after the end of July, but the Khmer Rouge said it would ignore the agreement. Indeed, Prince Sihanouk said at the time that the agreement was worthless without Khmer Rouge approval.

The Phnom Penh government has not mentioned the Kompong Thom attack but diplomatic reports said government forces had tried to recapture the city, which controls all routes to the capital and the northern provinces of Cansiem Reap, Oddar Meanchey and Preah Vihear.

The Khmer Rouge radio and a Sihanouk spokesman said the guerrillas had been able to overrun the city because of the "co-operation" of people there. They said that resistance forces now controlled all of Kompong Thom province which is one of the richest in Cambodia.

About 1,500 Sihanouk guerrillas attacked Kompong Thom from the northwest and an unknown number of Khmer Rouge from the south. The city was defended by some 1,000 special police who are said to be more reliable and aggressive than regular army units, now weakened by desertion and low morale.

The guerrillas said they captured four Soviet-built T54 tanks, other vehicles and some heavy artillery.

Western intelligence sources in Bangkok confirmed there had been fighting at Kompong Thom but did not know the situation there now. They said it would not be surprising if the guerrillas had overrun the city, as they had been active in the area for years and had gained substantial support from civilians.

The government, they said, now faced the possibility of being cut off from the north and might be forced to supply the area by national route 5, which runs through territory which is controlled by the Khmer Rouge.

In a radio broadcast the Khmer Rouge said non-communist forces had attacked government positions near Battambang and Sisophon, two government strongholds near the Thai border. A liberation front official said their guerrillas were involved, but denied it was a joint operation with the Khmer Rouge.

Co-operation with the Khmer Rouge is a sensitive issue for the non-communist guerrillas and for their supporters in the United States and elsewhere. They say they never fight alongside the Khmer Rouge, but sometimes they attack the same targets.

Diplomats say the most disturbing developments for the Phnom Penh government are increasing signs of support for the resistance, particularly the Khmer Rouge. There was evidence of growing hostility towards the government among civilians and the military, they said.

Cambodians travelling to and from the Thai border say they can now move freely and quickly across country compared with a year ago. They are rarely challenged by government forces who, they say, appear to control less territory than previously and are clearly less willing to fight. They say they frequently see government soldiers fraternising with the guerrillas belonging to all the resistance factions.

However, the Phnom Penh government last week said it had killed 6,600 guerrillas during the recent dry season offensive between November and May.

The Khmer Rouge's defeat of the American-backed Cambodian government army in the Kompong Thom area in 1971 is regarded as the turning point in the war which ended with the Khmer Rouge victory four years later.

Husain in peace plea to Europe

From a Correspondent in Dubai

KING Husain of Jordan last night called on Europe, and particularly the United Kingdom, to play a fuller part in the search for a Middle East peace. He suggested that it might be time for Douglas Hurd, the foreign secretary, to meet Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, as a gesture of support.

"I suppose they are in touch, and the meeting might be a welcome development. The PLO have done everything they were ever asked to do to meet the criteria that were set for them," he said. "They have not got much to show for it, but it is to their credit that they did what they have done so far."

King Husain, who is one of the Arab world's most loyal allies in the Arab world, said that the peace plan put forward by James Baker, the US Secretary of State, seemed to be dead, and buried, leaving Europe and Britain with an important role to play.

"Britain in particular has its links with the area, it has its position within Europe, and it has access to the United States. There is very definitely a positive influence that it could contribute," he said during a satellite interview from Amman.

He agreed that a meeting with Mr Arafat would be a welcome sign of confidence from Britain at a time when the Americans seem to be losing interest in maintaining their dialogue with the PLO. The PLO chairman met William Waldegrave, the foreign office minister, last year but has never had a formal meeting with a British cabinet minister.

"Europe has a voice that hopefully will be heard," King Husain said, "but there are extremists waiting and doing their utmost to destroy any future for the people of this area, and to make any progress towards peace a thing of the past."

Financial cloud over Kaifu

From Joe Joseph in Tokyo

TOSHIKI Kaifu yesterday became the latest in a long list of postwar Japanese prime ministers to fall under newspaper scrutiny when a newspaper disclosed details of a lucrative stock deal carried out by his closest aide, a Japanese MP's traditional treasurer.

Mr Kaifu, whose bid for the prime ministership last summer at the height of the Recruit bribery scandal was helped by his reputation as a clean politician, denied knowing about the deal or of benefiting from it.

The stock transaction has netted his aide, Mitsuo Ando, about 20 million yen (£2,000) on a purchase of 30 million yen's worth of shares in Meitec, a computer software company based in Mr Kaifu's constituency in Aichi, central Japan.

"It was very thoughtless behaviour," Mr Kaifu said. "It happened because of lack of supervision, so I have warned him severely. Of course, it is out of the question for cabinet members to engage in stock transactions, or for their secretaries to engage in activities that invite suspicion."

With most Japanese investors licking their wounds after the Tokyo stock market's recent crash, news of the 20 million yen profit has done little to dampen their curiosity about how MPs and their aides so often manage to pick shares that perform spectacularly well.

The Asahi newspaper said the purchase, even though made in his aide's name, came just three weeks after the Kaifu cabinet was inaugurated last August and it may have violated rules brought in last summer banning ministers from share-dealing.

The Asahi reported: "Under such circumstances, and especially because Mr Ando has been called Kaifu's treasurer, it is not too much to say that the prime minister himself broke the rule he had laid down."

260 leave Liberia on last plane

Abidjan — Another 260 Americans have fled Liberia in possibly the last US evacuation from Monrovia, the capital besieged by rebels. The refugees flew by chartered plane to Abidjan, Ivory Coast, to board a US military aircraft for Charleston, South Carolina. (Reuters)

Gold denial

Nairobi — Saudi Arabia has denied a report that it offered large amounts of gold for sale and insisted it had nothing to do with the recent fall in bullion prices. (Reuters)

No fizz

Lille — Cafe owners, restaurateurs and hoteliers in northern France are boycotting Coca-Cola to protest against plans to install vending machines for soft drinks. (Reuters)

Jumbo rampage

Libreville — Herds of elephants fleeing the noise made by timber workers have destroyed farms in southern Gabon, the Gabon News Agency said. (AP)

Karen attack

Rangoon — Security forces drove off Karen guerrillas who attacked a ferry on the Salween river in eastern Burma, wounding 17 passengers. (AP)

Poisoned water

Verden — This French town is without drinking water because of unexplained pollution. Trout placed in the water died. (AFP)

Death toll up

Shadyside, Ohio — The death toll from flash floods rose to 21 when a body was found in the Ohio river. Hopes faded for 16 missing people. (AP)

Book bomb

Ankara — A bomb believed to have been planted by Islamic fundamentalists exploded in a shop selling religious books here, injuring eight people.

Angola talks

Lisbon — Angola's government and the Unita rebels had talks near here at the weekend to discuss ending their 15-year civil war. (Reuters)

Costly cat

Adelaide — The cat that survived a 48-day journey from London without food or water in a car container may become the most expensive feline in Australia. Whoever adopts the stowaway will have to pay $870 in quarantine fees. (AP)

Protests will fuel emotions at Aids meeting

From Charles Bremner in New York

THOUSANDS of homosexuals are planning to give dramatic voice to their anger and despair when the International Conference on Aids opens in San Francisco tomorrow, the first time that the annual forum is being held in the city most identified with the disease.

The high emotion that surrounds the conference has been compounded this year by the growing militancy of America's gay community and by US laws which bar "sexual deviants" and Aids patients from entering the country. The Bush administration relaxed the rules, allowing conference participants to apply for special waivers, but that was not enough to prevent boycotts by more than 100 groups, including the International Red Cross, the European Community, the World Council of Churches and the French government.

As the medical experts and policy experts take stock of the epidemic now in its second decade, Aids activists from the US and around the world plan to stage disruptions and alternative events, mainly to protest against what they see as the failure of the US government to devote enough resources to finding treatments and a cure for Aids and caring for Aids patients. Over 80,000 Americans have died of the disease, 5,000 of them in San Francisco. Experts are alarmed at the surge of infection among heterosexual, intravenous drug users in America's big cities. They are also worried that a younger generation of homosexuals is reverting to unsafe sexual practices that could produce a "second wave" in the epidemic.

No reports of medical breakthroughs are expected at the conference, according to Dr Paul Volberding, the meeting's co-chairman. But organisations such as ACT-UP (the Aids Coalition to Unleash Power), a New York-based network that specialises in provocative public events, are calling for vigorous demonstrations, using language that the police claim will incite riots. In a show of force on Sunday, riot police staged a rehearsal in crowd control in Golden Gate park.

While the local authorities have been struggling to ensure San Francisco's reputation for enlightenment on Aids and homosexuality, policemen have been asking for gloves and goggles to protect themselves from contamination.

The flames were fanned last week when a senior police officer commented on television about unsubstantiated rumours that homosexuals were planning to hurl bags of contaminated blood. "I'm not saying I would take a gun out and shoot him but I'm not going to say I wouldn't," the officer said. He was subsequently assigned to a desk.

The force has appointed male and female homosexual officers to co-ordinate operations and required all officers to watch a videotape that attempts to explain why the protesters are so angry.

The militants say the government still regards the disease as a product of the sexual and racial ghetto. "I'm utterly ashamed of the way my country and society have responded to this disease," said Pat Christen, the San Francisco ACT-UP leader. The increasingly violent tactics of the militants are now separating them from the scientific and more moderate gay communities. These have drawn comfort from gains over the past year which have included a Congressional decision to spend one billion dollars over two years as "disaster relief" for Aids care and research.

There is evidence that prejudice over Aids persists, despite the efforts of President Bush and other leaders to demonstrate a new understanding for the victims. The American Civil Liberties Union reported on widespread patterns of discrimination in insurance, housing, health care and employment. What was more, one third of all people who experienced discrimination do not have the disease, the group said.

In New York, several thousand militant gays disrupted traffic at the weekend in protests against "gay-bashing". At one stage an angry mob surrounded the Greenwich Village flat of Edward Koch, the former mayor, and heckled and jostled him until he was rescued by police.

Settling up, and down

Woodrow Wyatt

You may not have heard of the Local Government Chronicle, but officials in local government know this independent journal well, talk to it and respect it. Last Friday it carried significant information about community charge gathering. This received scant coverage in those upmarket newspapers which have a lofty disdain for the charge, maintaining that it should have been buried at birth. To fortify the argument that the charge is a washout, stories proliferate of refusal to pay, forcing councils into cashflow shortages and high-interest borrowings. But the LGC's survey blames shortfalls in payment mainly on computer software problems.

It found "many councils suffering delays in processing rebates. A number could not provide up-to-date information as their systems could not post cash to accounts, in particular Gloucester..." Those like South Tyneside, with its own in-house software, were collecting well; there, 91 per cent of bills have already been paid in part or in full. Eastleigh, Elmbridge, Hereford, Babergh and Sutton had collection rates of 80 per cent or above. Scunthorpe reported 75 per cent collection in April/May and cashflow ahead of last year.

It is councils suffering from software failures and incompetence that are in trouble. Plymouth, with a 50 per cent collection rate, sent out 18 per cent of its bills only in the week ending June 9. Sheffield, with a strike in its benefits section, has a large rebate backlog. Generally, the trend seems to be that collection and refusal to pay are no worse than under the old rates system, often better.

Properly managed councils should have no cashflow worries. Government grants fund 50 per cent of local spending, and much of it for this year has been paid up-front. Similarly, there is no difficulty with the 25 per cent or more coming from the new uniform business rate, of which £2,500 million has already been distributed to councils.

MPs, ministers and even I (as a recipient of letters to my News of the World column) can confirm that complaints about the charge have almost vanished from our mail. The new system is settling down unexpectedly quickly. This is remarkable, as only around 18 million previously paid domestic rates; now another 18 million who paid nothing before have been added. True, about 10 million chargepayers are entitled to rebates of up to 80 per cent, something that is not always publicised enough. Those on the lowest incomes get a supplement to their income support, enabling them to pay the 20 per cent of the charge not subject to rebates. If their council is well run, they can make a little profit; if not, they have to find an extra pound or so a week, thus becoming more sensitive to the council's performance. The local elections showed from different parts of the country that the accountability factor is starting to work. This greatly annoys wasteful, spendthrift and incompetent councils. Most councils deliberately overspend, ensuring for this year as it was the last year they could falsely blame their excesses on the government for introducing a new tax with new taxpayers. Next year that excuse will look shop-soiled. But some power to cap councils wantonly multiplying their chargepayers must be retained. If the courts decide this week, on appeal, that Mr Christopher Patten was not within his powers in his recent council capping, then the law must be changed. Capping reinforces accountability for the comparatively few utterly deplorable offenders who take advantage of the long gap before voters can next express their anger.

The Audit Commission has identified value-for-money and efficiency improvements of £1,328 million, half of which have now been achieved. Mr Howard Davies, the audit controller, remarks that "local councils are, on average, slowly becoming more efficient". Speeding up cost-cutting is what the community charge is all about.

Certainly there will be adjustments in such areas as extending non means-tested transitional relief, helping student parents, protecting husbands and wives living in houses of low rateable value who suddenly pay much more, and so forth. Also, ways must be found to ensure that councils receiving government money to help the especially hard hit pass it on and do not spend it elsewhere. I hope the government will not spend the much-talked-of extra £3 billion on alleviations, but, if there is this money available, will reserve much of it for tax cuts.

By the next election the new system will be so embedded that business rate, of which £2,500 million has already been distributed to councils.

MPs, ministers and even I (as a recipient of letters to my News of the World column) can confirm that complaints about the charge have almost vanished from our mail. The new system is settling down unexpectedly quickly. This is remarkable, as only around 18 million previously paid domestic rates; now another 18 million who paid nothing before have been added. True, about 10 million chargepayers are entitled to rebates of up to 80 per cent, something that is not always publicised enough. Those on the lowest incomes get a supplement to their income support, enabling them to pay the 20 per cent of the charge not subject to rebates. If their council is well run, they can make a little profit; if not, they have to find an extra pound or so a week, thus becoming more sensi-

...and moreover

ALAN COREN

There are no flies on me. So why is one of my ears larger than the other? Were this a decent comic, that intriguing little prolegomenon would be followed by (Answer: foot of col. 6), whereupon, having turned the page upside down, the reader would immediately fall about, slapping his thigh and hooting, and repeating the joke to as many neighbours as he could manage before being asked to stand in the corridor. But, sadly for all of us, time has cracked on a bit since Form 4a and life's riddles no longer offer themselves up for quick solutions. This is a serious newspaper, and even after I have led you through 800 words of verbal sight of the promised answer. When we get to the foot of col. 2, no good, I am afraid, will come of turning the page around. We shall be none the wiser.

On Saturday morning, the weather took a turn for the better so I went into the garden with a book. Which book doesn't matter, but you ought to know that it didn't smell. I am a great sniffer of books; it is a particular pleasure, and one which ensures, for me at least, that television will never replace great literature; I can thus be sure that the book, on this occasion, was entirely unscented. So was I. I had just showered, I was clean as a whistle. I did not smell of anything at all. Certainly not of rotten plum or midge. All around me, on the other hand, the garden smelt of everything a warm June garden smells of. For anything keen on smelling, I was the last place to go.

As I opened the book, I felt feet on my left ear. I shook my head, gently, and the wasp took off, did a couple of circuits of my head, and landed on my right ear. I was thus forced to conclude that it had not landed in error. It had been on the lookout for an ear.

These days, one does not set about the execution of wasps lightly. Apart from the fact that we are all caring one-world persons now, live and let live, there is the question of even more caring one-world persons walking about in balalaeva helmets and Wasp Rights sashes, ready to lob a Molotov cocktail over the fence at the first sound of swatting. I therefore lifted my book to my ear, in the hope that the wasp would walk on to it and could then be carried carefully to somewhere earless.

No bibliophile, I could tell this from a sudden sharp pain in the lobe. I leapt, flailed, swore, and sprinted into the house to hold an ice-cube against the ear to reduce the swelling. After a few minutes, I had a big, cold ear. At this point, the smart aleck on my cheque card murmured "Sweet are the uses of adversity", and I knew what I had to do. If a big throbbing ear was not to be wasted, I should have to find out why I had it. I went to the library.

While the librarian was looking at my ear, I said "Have you got a good book on wasps?" She came back with Burton's Encyclopaedia of Insects, Reynolds's Bees and Wasps, and Daghish's Name That Insect (which, if I am any judge of the culture, could well be an ITV celebrity quiz show any day now), and by 3pm, I had vesperology under my belt. Were I ever to find myself round a bridge table with Burton, Reynolds and Daghish, my small talk would leave them stunned. I know not only that the queen wasp, unable to make wax, builds her nest from spit and paper, but that, unlike the queen bumblebee, she starts with the roof. There she is fed on chewed-up insects by her sexless daughters, but they do no housework. This is done by the hooverly, which eats wasp droppings.

I know a lot more stuff like this, but I have room only to tell you that the wasp subsists on midges and nectar, particularly that oozing from rotten fruit, and that all three authorities go to great pains to stress that wasp is thus a wonderful friend to me. But I am an authority, too, now - especially when it comes to great pain and what I have been unable to discover is why, if we are neither rotten fruit or midges, wasps want to walk on our ears, and sting us when we object. On this, Burton, Reynolds and Daghish are silent. They say nothing about wasps and men, except that they are wonderful friends.

P.A. J. Waddington argues against proposals to institute an 'officer class' for the police

Bobby to brasshat—the only way

Mr Thatcher, we are told, is eager to introduce an "officer class" into the British police, and her enthusiasm is shared by some senior Tory backbenchers. After ten years in which the police have been the only public service that the government has persistently favoured and generously funded, it seems that radical restructuring is likely to be imposed on a force reluctant to accept it.

The danger of a single hierarchy is that it creates a closed world of senior staff steeped in traditional methods. This is particularly the case in the police, where even Her Majesty's Inspectors of Constabulary are recruited from retired chief constables.

The proposal is to introduce a two-tier hierarchy, like that of the military, with some recruits entering at the level of inspector or chief inspector. The argument runs that the task of senior officers is different from that of their subordinates. Senior officers exercise command and must manage those beneath them. The skills, knowledge and expertise that make a good bobby or detective are not the same as those needed to be a good commander or manager. But will an officer class make the police more efficient? I doubt it.

The military analogy is inapplicable in at least two respects. First, despite the superficial similarities of rank structure, senior police officers do not, and cannot, command subordinates as their military counterparts do. Operational decisions in the police are not taken at the top of the pyramid and carried out by those at the bottom. Police do not implement pre-planned strategy, but respond to whatever problems the public bring to their attention. An American sociologist has accurately described policing as dealing with any situation where "something is happening which ought not to be happening and about which something should be done - now".

The "something" happening can be almost anything. In a recent survey of calls made to a divisional control room, I found that only a quarter were unambiguous reports of crime. Far more common were vague complaints of "trouble" with youths, customers, neighbours and so on. People facing virtually any conceivable emergency turn to the police, from public utilities advising police of emergency repairs requiring road works, to an old lady who has a cat trapped in her bedroom.

These public demands enter the police hierarchy at the bottom. A telephone call is normally answered in the control room by a constable, who must gather all relevant information and decide upon the most appropriate response. Consequently, junior officers will decide whether to act immediately or to wait, and they will determine whether or not to deploy a foot patrol or a car, or perhaps several cars.

At the scene, the officers attending will decide what action to take. It is for them to determine whether to arrest youths causing a nuisance, or tell them to move on. Much of what these officers do remains hidden from their superiors, because supervisors cannot be everywhere. Only if the officer decides to take formal action, such as arresting someone, is the incident likely to come to the attention of superiors.

This leads me to the second respect in which the military analogy is inapplicable. The police are not deployed in groups of officers, but as single individuals. Except in the unusual circumstances of public-order policing, senior officers do not accompany their subordinates on the ground. Subordinates undertake their duties, exercising potentially wide discretion, virtually alone.

They report back to their superiors, but the need to guard their backs encourages subordinates to say as little as they can get away with. A superior who had never been a constable and attended a "domestic" (a quarrel between husband and wife or neighbours, for example), would be unable to envisage the particular situation that lay behind the cryptic entry in a message log.

A divorce between subordinates with street knowledge and superiors without it would further extend the already wide and damaging gulf between the ranks. As it is, there is a tendency for "reliefs" (a group of officers working the same shifts together) to acquire a protective shell of solidarity against outsiders - among whom are numbered their superiors.

The sole redeeming feature of senior police officers, in the eyes of many of their subordinates, is that at least they too pounded the beat, even if it was a long time ago. Even spend only a limited time on the beat, tend to be dismissed as innocent novices when they begin their ascent through the ranks. An officer class would pose a serious danger of the junior ranks becoming a law unto themselves.

There is a need for greater openness in the police, and an officer class would achieve neither. It is one more example of the kind of quick fix that has bedevilled criminal justice policy in recent years.

The author is Director of Criminal Justice Studies at Reading University.

Might mob rule spread to Romania's neighbours?

Attacks by club-wielding miners on the streets of Bucharest not only threaten democracy in Romania but represent a potential nightmare for all post-communist Eastern Europe. What if the still-fragile democratic institutions in the area are swept away by rampaging mobs? After escaping from communism, are these countries now to be plagued by acute class war?

This is possible, but much would have to go wrong before Romania's fate overtook its neighbours. Romania is markedly different from them in a number of ways. Above all, nowhere else was the destruction of civil society as far-reaching as under Ceausescu. This has made it much easier for the National Salvation Front to manipulate a politically inexperienced and traumatised population for its own benefit. The Front has the authority of power, is accepted as having made the revolution of Christmas last year, and is trusted because it claims to have rid the country of Ceausescu, ensured improved food supplies and doubled miners' wages. Anyone who questions these assumptions is, therefore, an enemy. This explains why the Front was elected with such a big majority.

Despite its protestations of having renounced communism, the Front is for all practical purposes the communist party in a new guise. Because of Ceausescu's long reign, reform communism was never discredited in Romania, as it was elsewhere. Consequently, the solutions that have been tried and have failed in the rest of the Eastern bloc still command respect in sections of Romania's technical intelligentsia. There is still a belief, articulated by the Front's eminence grise, Silviu Brucan, among others, that a government run in the name of a backward and ignorant society possesses the answers to economic and technical reform.

The democratic credentials of the leadership and much of the Romanian population are threadbare. Neither is prepared to live with the searching criticism that is essential to democracy. The distinction between opponent and enemy is simply ignored. This led to the destruction of the headquarters of the opposition parties and of the one independent newspaper, Romania Libera, as well as the beating up of anyone who looked like an anti-government demonstrator. Nowhere else in post-communist Europe is the situation so dire. Society in other countries has survived and organised to some extent, which has made smoother the transition to democracy. While in Romania the rulers and the intellectuals are completely at odds, elsewhere the opposite is true. The intellectuals' function is to give public currency and legitimacy to ideas and visions of the future; at the moment these ideas are firmly democratic. This makes it virtually impossible to give authority to non-democratic political movements. The post-communist governments accept this, even in Bulgaria, where the ex-communist Bulgarian Socialist party has built up a commanding lead in the elections.

This unity between rulers and intellectuals means that it is difficult for the kind of crude working-class thuggery seen in Bucharest to gain a political foothold. And the unity of rulers and intellectuals has been strengthened by the general defeat of the left, which is hardly surprising after four decades of self-styled proletarian rule. In Hungary, even the Social Democrats failed to win any parliamentary seats.

George Schöpfung sees economic advance as the key to the consolidation of East European democracy

Defeat does not mean rout, however. Working-class support gave the communists' successors a respectable vote in East Germany and Czechoslovakia; only in Hungary did the ex-communists win less than 10 per cent of the vote. The sections of the working class that benefited from communist rule, especially those in outdated heavy industries such as mining and engineering, will continue to support the communists' successors. Even in Poland, with its long tradition of working-class anti-government militancy, and its acute deflation and a consumption squeeze, Lech Walesa was successful in persuading transport strikers to go back to work. Hatred of intellectuals is probably deeper and more widespread in Romania than elsewhere. The Ceausescu years drove a thick wedge between the bulk of the population, who were wretchedly poor, and the intellectuals, who were marginally better off; hence the violent anti-intellectual reaction of the workers. This is not true to anything like the same extent in other countries.

In Czechoslovakia, Poland and Hungary, the manual working class is more differentiated and has better avenues of upward mobility than in Romania. This mobility has helped to ease some of the stress of the change. Because these states have some time before any major economic crisis, they should be able to carry on building the institutions that will allow them to absorb the coming shocks of social and economic upheaval. The success of the democratic elections and establishment of multi-party systems will be an encouragement.

The Romanian situation is further distinguished from that of the other states by Ceausescu's having exhausted the unifying power of nationalism through his constant over-emphasis of Romanian nationalism. Elsewhere, this is far less true, so appeals to nationalism and national pride can help to cement unity around the symbols and myths that hold the communities together. Not that ideas of nationalism can be used indefinitely to ease the transition, but in the short term such pride is valuable in offsetting cynicism about government and in generating energies to tackle new problems under highly adverse conditions.

Furthermore, Romania is now a terrible warning. No government in the area will wish to see mobs terrifying citizens as they have done in Bucharest. The distaste is particularly acute in Hungary, because of the increase in the number of refugees from Romania, mostly ethnic Hungarians. According to some sources, they are arriving at the rate of 600 a day. The story these refugees tell is of universal fear, and although few would have credited it, they say the situation was better under Ceausescu.

For the moment, then, the fledgling democracies of post-communist Europe are relatively secure. But there are dangers. If there is an economic collapse, the appeal of demagoguery of the kind seen in Romania will become much stronger.

In such circumstances, there could be Bucharest-style violence, based on the claim that only manual workers matter, coupled with xenophobic nationalism. Under different political conditions a section of the intelligentsia might emerge to give it shape. The new governments of the old communist bloc are watching anxiously to prevent that happening. Ultimately, only the success of the economic transformation can guarantee it.

The author lectures on East European politics at the London School of Economics.

Stirling in the money

One of Prince Charles's burgesses, the architect James Stirling, is expected to win a £55,000 prize this week. He was nominated by Edward Heath for the architecture section of the Japan Air Association's Praemium Imperiale awards, which are among the world's most valuable, and is understood to have won the support of the judges, who in addition to Heath include Jacques Chirac, Helmut Schmidt, Amintore Fanfani and the American banker David Rockefeller.

Stirling's expected victory, which will be announced at Claridges on Thursday lunchtime and celebrated at a £40,000 banquet at Hampton Court in the evening, will spark off renewed controversy in the architectural world. Stirling's design for Peter Palmbo's proposed Mansion House scheme - which would have involved the demolition of eight listed Victorian buildings - was likened by Prince Charles to a "1930s wireless".

Stirling made his name in the 1960s with a series of designs that seemed to clash violently with their surroundings, such as the Cambridge history faculty library, with its vast, invisibly supported glass roof. Unsurprisingly, Stirling, along with those other famous members of what Prince Charles regards as the carbuncle club, Richard Rogers and the newly-knighted Sir Norman Foster, will not be among those speaking at the Prince of Wales's summer school at Oxford in August, when he hopes to stamp his personal vision of Britain on the country's young architects. In the prospectus for the school, Charles declares that good architecture is a matter of "good manners" as much as anything. Jules Lubbock, the school's director, yesterday summed up the purpose of the royal charm school as being "to oppose the view that just because people use word processors inside, the building has to look like one outside" - or come to that, like a 50-year-old radio.

White slight

Details of Nelson Mandela's autobiography are due to be announced this week amid feverish speculation in the publishing world that the white South African novelist and anti-apartheid campaigner Nadine Gordimer will collaborate in writing it. Although not due until 1992, the book, as yet untitled, is thought to have broken all records for an advance: the American publisher Little Brown is not saying what it paid for the world rights, but trade sources put the figure in excess of £5 million. Already the German publisher S. Fischer has bought the German rights for DM1.8 million (£640,000), but the weekly news magazine Der Spiegel, likely to be one of the prime bidders for German serialisation rights, says dismissively: "We don't buy blind, and besides Mandela is not a top priority for us."

Nadine Gordimer's British agent, Hilary Rubinstein, confirms that her participation is "under discussion", and it seems that the only sticking point now is the precise nature of the collaboration. The choice of the white Gordimer will anger some purists in the ANC who will regard it as a slight, implying that no black writer is considered good enough. The publishing world, on the other hand, is thrilled at the potential link-up and predicts the world's biggest seller since Chairman Mao's Little Red Book.

Weighty matters

Sports minister Colin Moynihan is a busy man. Fresh from assisting the Sardinian police in keeping English football supporters in order, he is back in London to fulfil an equally difficult task - licking into shape some of his heftier parliamentary colleagues. With the expert Diana Moran, known to breakfast television viewers as the Green Goddess, he will put them through their paces on the lawn of the Houses of Parliament today in preparation for the annual Lords Commons tug-of-war on Monday. After the rehearsal, he flies back to Sardinia for England's key match against Egypt.

The tug-of-war sponsor, the Cancer Relief Macmillan Fund, expects a large attendance - in every sense - today, plus an assortment of other parliamentarians tagging along for a free workout. Displaying commendable anticipation, it has ordered dozens of T-shirts for the occasion - all extra large.

Anne she's off!

Princesses and princesses in the royal enclosure at Ascot today will take second place to a far older royal personage, who will be honoured nearly 300 years after inaugurating horse-races on the Berkshire course. A new grandstand building has been named in honour of Queen Anne, who founded racing at Ascot in 1711 when she paid £559 19s 6d to lay out a course on the heath. The first race of Royal week has long been the Queen Anne Stakes, but Ascot has taken nearly 300 years to pay her architectural tribute. Finished just in time for this year's big event, the Queen Anne building conforms to Ascot style, being of the same brick and stone as the old facade. Captain Nicholas Beaumont, the clerk of the course, says it will cater for "grandstand" people - the 95 per cent of Ascot's 250,000 visitors who are not invited into the royal enclosure. It has five private dining rooms - and, more important for the hoi polloi - extensive bars. "It means another 2,000 people can now drink under cover," says Beaumont, no doubt recalling that rain and Ascot go together like football and hooligans. The founder herself had trouble with the weather in 1712, when the royal carriage got stuck in the mud. If it doesn't rain today it just won't be Ascot.

In the negative

Not all MPs are anxious to get in front of the camera. Some are equally happy behind it, as an all-party photography exhibition at Westminster demonstrates. Pictures on display include four stunning shots taken by Labour MP Andrew Bennett using an £8 camera, Austin Mitchell's portrayal of "Elvis Presley's stork", Russia's foremost fan of western rock music, pictures by Denis Healey, perhaps Westminster's best-known amateur photographer, and so on - the most by any single exhibitor - by Tory MP Jerry Wiggins. Pure coincidence, of course, that he organised the exhibition.

Labour MP Roland Boyes used the occasion to renew his call for the ban on still cameras in the chamber to be lifted. Obviously Ascot has taken nearly 300 years to pay her architectural tribute. Finished just in time for this year's big event, the Queen Anne building conforms to Ascot style, being of the same brick and stone as the old facade. Captain Nicholas Beaumont, the clerk of the course, says it will cater for

FLI
The House of Commons...
The author is Director of Criminal Justice Studies at Reading University.
The arrest of...
Only...
CONSP
Hundreds of...
The author lectures on East European politics at the London School of Economics.

1 Pennington Street, London E1 9XN Telephone 071-782 5000

FLEXIBLE RESPONSE

The debate on the defence estimates in the House of Commons this week takes place in the shadow of the government's review of "options for change", the most far-reaching attempt to remodel British defence strategy since Labour abandoned Britain's defence commitments east of Suez. Tom King, the defence secretary, did well yesterday to lower some of the House's more extravagant expectations of an early "peace dividend". Defence spending cuts cannot be turned on and off, and the other, private, debate between a small group of ministers and senior officials, the outcome of which will be presented to the cabinet next month, is not primarily concerned with the volume of defence spending.

The pursuit of cost-effectiveness and value for money is important, but the primary task of the "options for change" team is to respond to the dramatic improvement in East-West relations. The correct moves will not necessarily translate into immediate reductions in spending, although yesterday's cancellation of the next batch of Tornados for the RAF indicates the government's readiness to cut back firmly on excess equipment.

There is still instability and uncertainty in Eastern Europe, of which the violence in Romania is unlikely to be the last example. Mr King also reminded the Commons yesterday that, even if the West's best hopes for conventional East-West force reductions are fulfilled, the Soviet Union's continuing military strength could not be ignored. That said, Mr King is luckier than his forerunners. Whatever happens now in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, his advisers are unanimous that the threat from the Warsaw Pact, which has dictated the size and shape of all western defence budgets for so long, has virtually disappeared. In restructuring the armed forces, he has the opportunity, and obligation, to be bold.

He does not need to look for another enemy. The argument that defence planning should now concentrate on possible intervention in far-away places, such as the Middle East, the Far East and Africa, obviously attractive to defence chiefs, should be resisted. Talk of "force projection" conjures up the Mountbatten concept of a deep-water navy patrolling the globe, ready to intervene at a moment's notice in brushfire wars.

There should be no place for romanticism in ministerial thinking. But greater flexibility is the answer, viewed from a different standpoint. Huge static armies in central Europe must give place to mobile, flexible, forces. But this should not imply that Nato rapid deployment forces will be on standby to intervene in regional conflicts around the world. For Mr King, the sole yardstick should be the need to transform the present mix of heavyweight forces and lighter, flexible units into restructured, streamlined services. Without exaggerated emphasis on "out of area" capability, adequately flexible forces would be capable of responding to trouble in central Europe or elsewhere, as part of Nato or, if necessary, alone.

The heavy concentration of troops and equipment in the British Army of the Rhine will be abandoned. Here Mr King should not confine himself to tinkering, withdrawing one of the three armoured divisions or even just a number of units from all the divisions, while waiting for conventional arms control negotiations to dictate the speed and shape of force reductions. There is no longer any need to wait for the Vienna talks to set a timetable. The options for change review must produce proposals that can be implemented irrespective of the multilateral arms control process.

Britain is likely to need only one division in West Germany, no longer called the British Army of the Rhine but merged into a multinational corps. The question then would be how to adapt and equip smaller, home-based, forces for a mobile role. That in turn would imply changes in the RAF and Royal Navy, with fewer Tornado squadrons in Germany, less emphasis on anti-submarine frigates and a sensible expansion of amphibious capabilities.

Mr King, undoubtedly supported by the prime minister, has so far adopted a very cautious public stance. But the team handling the review includes some of the defence ministry's most forward-looking and free-thinking civil servants. The team has, wisely, been kept small, and the defence bureaucracy held at arm's length. Its members should be encouraged to treat nothing as sacred, and to hone the number of "options" to a politically manageable total. What Mr King and the cabinet need is a document that lays out precisely a short list of recommendations, radical enough to effect a genuine transformation of the armed services in the 1990s.

GANGING UP ON THE IRA

The arrest of a third suspected member of the IRA on the Dutch-Belgian border yesterday, following that of two others on Saturday, is a significant reward for the enhancement of co-operation between the European Community's anti-terrorist forces over the past few years. A fourth man is still being sought, but there must be no relaxation of this impressive joint effort, even if he too is caught. This summer, IRA attacks on British servicemen and other civilians in West Germany and the Low Countries have become both more frequent and more audacious. The Community's interior ministers are unanimous in assessing the threat posed by the IRA: it is Europe's most dangerous indigenous terrorist gang.

Only Irish terrorism has become a European phenomenon. To be sure, Basque separatists, Italian anarchists or neo-fascists and the West German Red Army Faction can and do operate across the increasingly open borders of the Community. The Red Army Faction was also able, until the last few weeks, to use East Berlin as a bolt-hole; indeed, most terrorist groups have until recently obtained help from Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Several Arab governments and the Palestine Liberation Organisation are also known to have provided money, arms or training in the past.

But the only European terrorists who bear comparison with their Arab counterparts are the IRA. Only the IRA maintains a network of sympathisers that extends into several EC countries; its murder squads move swiftly from one to the other, confusing the security forces by mounting a wide variety of attacks on vulnerable British targets. Only the IRA benefits from large-scale fund-raising in the United States.

Only the IRA can count on hitherto insuperable obstacles to the extradition of its suspected terrorists from one EC member, Ireland, to another, Britain. One of the suspects arrested on Saturday, Donna Maguire, appears to have been wanted by the West German authorities in connection with two attacks last year. An informal approach by the West German federal prosecutor for her extradition was made to the Irish authorities, but formal moves seem to have been deferred until it was too late. German red tape, ignorance of Irish extradition law, paucity of evidence or sheer bungling may all have been responsible for the fact that Maguire never had to face extradition proceedings after her release. The Irish judge who acquitted Maguire described the circumstances of her arrest as "extremely suspicious, to say the least".

This was scarcely an advertisement for the smooth functioning of the European Community's concerted counter-attack. Irish politicians cannot reasonably accuse West German justice of harbouring the anti-Irish prejudices sometimes attributed to the British police or courts. Equally, the West Germans cannot reasonably complain of Irish intransigence if their own officials did indeed fail to serve a warrant for extradition in the prescribed way.

That some of the facts of this case are now public may be embarrassing for the Irish and the West German governments, though both have refused to accept any blame. But it is good for the same majority of people in both countries who detest the IRA. In much the same way, last week's admission by the British director of public prosecutions that the convictions of seven Irish people in 1976 were unsafe was salutary for the reputation of British justice. If the European Community is serious about defeating the IRA, its member governments must become readier to admit their mistakes.

CONSPICUOUS DESTITUTION

Hundreds of young people camp out in the streets of London every night. In increasing numbers they are doing so in other large British cities. The alarm and pity this causes to the populace has at last communicated itself to the government, which has responded with a mixture of proposals. The most substantial is a programme to set up emergency shelters and hostels in London.

Concentrating on the capital first in this way might prove to have been a miscalculation, for one result could be to make London a more attractive place to the homeless. The government would therefore do well to treat its immediate programme as a short-term expedient. It should not wait too long before backing up its provision of emergency shelters in London with the same elsewhere, and then preparing a more fundamental attack on this complex phenomenon. Merely to move the "cardboard cities" indoors will not be enough.

Conspicuous destitution is no advertisement either for London or for government policy, even though neither is directly to blame. The very prosperity of London is undoubtedly a magnet to homeless young people from the provinces; and the publicity its cardboard cities have been given in the past has unwittingly signalled that survival there is possible without a roof over one's head. The prospect sounds immensely unattractive, but the experience is evidently not unattractive enough.

The government has not yet devised a formula for paying adequate social security to young people which does not incidentally encourage them into a life of welfare dependency, but it must keep trying. Until an answer is found young people can find themselves trapped on the streets by their own lack of means and high London rents. The simplistic assumption that all young people can expect to be housed by their parents, which is still in theory an element in government policy, ignores the upheavals in family life resulting from widespread divorce and remarriage.

One of the more surprising and disturbing features of the phenomenon is that empty beds exist every night in shelters and hostels run by voluntary agencies, often not far from those illicit encampments and well known to those living there. There is more to this baffling problem than poverty alone, or lack of facilities alone. The state of mind of the young people concerned is often as depressed as their surroundings, their general mood of apathy and indifference being stirred only by the need to eat and to resort to petty crime to obtain the means.

Coaxing homeless young people into the new shelters will need some psychological subtlety if the plan is to work. The task is not merely to empty the streets at night, but to bring back into society those who have been squeezed (or have squeezed themselves) out of it. That will need a ladder of accommodation, from the streets to shelters, from shelters to flats or more formal hostels, and from there to something approaching normality.

The proposals include a scheme of counselling, and if that ladder is to be climbed some encouragement has to be available. In fact many of the young people living rough are scarcely more than children whose parents have failed them, and who are too young to have learnt how to take charge of their own lives.

Proposed changes on abortion

From Lord Brightman

Sir, In his letter (June 11) the Bishop of Gloucester says that the General Synod, despite enquiries, had been unable to establish just what the law on abortion, as proposed to be amended, would allow.

The conditions in which it is proposed that a pregnancy may lawfully be terminated clinically are set out in clause 34 of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill as amended in committee by the House of Commons. The clause in fact expresses in statutory language the same provisions as were reached in 1988 unanimously by a select committee of the House of Lords, of which I had the honour to be chairman and of which the bishop was a distinguished member.

Clause 34, as it now stands, would reduce the maximum gestational age for terminating a pregnancy from 28 weeks to 24 weeks across the whole field, with only two exceptions, one relating to the state of health of the mother, and the other relating to the state of health of the unborn child.

As regards the former, there are three relevant gradations:

1. If the medical diagnosis is "risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman", a termination is permissible under the existing law down to the 28th week of pregnancy. The Bill proposes to reduce this to 24 weeks.

2. If, however, the diagnosis is "risk to the life of the pregnant woman", the law is and has been, since long before the Abortion Act 1967, that "abortion up to birth" is permissible. The life of the mother must come first.

3. The only other case dependent on the health of the mother, in which a termination would be permissible up to birth under the proposed legislation, would be if the termination is "necessary" to prevent both "grave" and "permanent" injury to the mother's health.

As regards diagnosed abnormalities in the foetus or child carried by the mother, it should be appreciated that under the existing law a termination is only permissible if there is "substantial risk" that the child if born would suffer from such abnormalities as to be "seriously handicapped". In this case, the clause as it stands would abolish the existing 28-week rule.

The reason why the select committee reached the same conclusion was summarised in this sentence from their report (HL 50, p.18): "If, for example, an unborn child were diagnosed as grossly abnormal and unable to lead any meaningful life, there is in the opinion of the Committee no logic in requiring the mother to carry her unborn child to full term merely because the diagnosis was too late to enable an operation for abortion to be carried out before the 28th completed week".

There are no other exceptions to the proposed 24-week rule.

In conclusion, I would add that any move to inactivate the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 into the substantive provisions of the Abortion Act 1967 would be the worst possible step. Why should the medical profession be put at risk of prosecution if a pregnancy is terminated in strict accordance with the time limits and other conditions imposed by statute?

To allay the fears of the Bishop of Middlesex (June 16), I would point out that the chief purpose of the changes is to combine a lower gestational limit for abortion generally with a safety net for the mother facing disaster in the third trimester.

Yours faithfully,
BRIGHTMAN,
House of Lords,
June 13.

Gas competition

From Mr I. W. Whitting

Sir, There are some fundamental misconceptions contained in your leading article ("Keeping up the pressure", June 12), which result in a thoroughly misleading view of the effective and efficient performance of British Gas since privatisation in the increasingly competitive environment that has been developing.

In the contract gas market, gas-on-gas competition is being actively pursued. Our pipeline system is available for use by any independent supplier and 5,000 requests have already been received.

On the tariff side, the review of the formula was provided for in the prospectus issued at the time of the privatisation of British Gas and follows the pattern set for the review of the British Telecom formula two years ago. To say that it comes now as a new initiative to remedy identified problems is wrong. Indeed the Director General of Gas Supply has said that he enters upon the review with no preconceptions.

In the contract gas market, gas-on-gas competition is being actively pursued. Our pipeline system is available for use by any independent supplier and 5,000 requests have already been received.

On the tariff side, the review of the formula was provided for in the prospectus issued at the time of the privatisation of British Gas and follows the pattern set for the review of the British Telecom formula two years ago. To say that it comes now as a new initiative to remedy identified problems is wrong. Indeed the Director General of Gas Supply has said that he enters upon the review with no preconceptions.

These carefully thought out recommendations draw upon and bring together the experience of the best history teaching, and provide a programme which will ensure that all children, throughout their school careers, are grounded in and enjoy this vital foundation subject.

Cars from abroad

From the Editor of Which?

Sir, Of course there are discounts on many models of car in the UK, and in many cases that may mean it's not worth importing those models ("A goldmine waiting to be plundered", Motoring, June 15). But there are still very many models that are worth bringing over from Europe, as our publication, Importing a Car, shows. Checking prices abroad as well as searching for the best deal in the UK ought to be part of shopping around for any potential car buyer.

That apart, many cars aren't discounted heavily (or even at all) in the UK - new and top-of-the-range models, for example. In these cases, there are likely to be clear savings in importing, as well as for more basic models (May Which?, for example, quoted a Ford Fiesta which we could buy abroad for 25 per cent cheaper than the lowest price we found in Britain).

The fact remains that British motorists usually pay more than their European counterparts. It's an inequity we've campaigned against for many years, and which may only now, with 1992 and an investigation by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, be on the verge of ending.

Yours faithfully,
SUE LEGGATE, Editor, Which?
2 Marylebone Road, NW1,
June 15.

South African 'tango'

From Sir Peter Fawcus

Sir, In your leader, "Tango for two" (June 8), you place the burden of passing words of wisdom to Mr Mandela on the Western leaders he will shortly be meeting, other than those in the US where internal politics have tended to blur the issues. In view of this country's historical association with South Africa, our position in the Commonwealth, with its concern for the whole southern African region, and the projected meeting between Mr Mandela and Mrs Thatcher in London early in July, that burden falls primarily on Mrs Thatcher.

The eyes of the negotiators in South Africa have been set on a new constitution to replace the one enshrined in the Act of Union, 1909 - the whites seeking protection from black domination through structural guarantees, the ANC adamant that there should be no more racial group privileges in future.

Compromise on this aspect will be crucial but extremely difficult to achieve and there could be long-drawn-out arguments about checks and balances, etc. Above all, there is an urgent need for an early settlement which would allow Mr Mandela's outstanding leadership qualities to be harnessed to the service of the state, while he is still fit for active political life.

In the long term, the blacks have time on their side. In the short and medium term, however, their only hope of substantial political advance is by power-sharing. The whites at present hold all the reins

Carving up the countryside

From Mr Max Nicholson

Sir, With the impending detailed scrutiny by the House of Lords of part VII of the Environmental Protection Bill, the last chance will occur to avert the disaster to environmental conservation dreamed up last July by the Government.

The Lords, on second reading, have already courteously but damningly exposed the total unacceptability of this nastily misconceived fudge (report, Parliament, May 15). They have shown the plain national need to use the coming White Paper for a fresh, unburied, properly thought-out consensus solution to the overhaul of our 40-year-old environmental structure.

It is essential to uphold the principle of the 1949 National Parks Act in providing for an annual report to be considered by Parliament. This should be made by a single, responsible UK body combining the highest scientific and environmental experience, advised by devolved bodies representing the whole of the UK and each of the hitherto separate countryside, leisure and nature-conservation functions.

Failing a return at once to the established constitutional convention of basing reform in national heritage matters on informed consensus, it is idle for ministers to look for continuance of the devotion of essential voluntary effort and funding in getting them out of the mess created by their arrogance and undemocratic conduct.

Failing a prompt ministerial announcement of acceptance of this course, Parliament through the House of Lords must now do its rational duty by sending part VII back for a rethink. Should they fail in this, much of the United Kingdom's future capability and merited reputation in this field will be forfeit.

Yours faithfully,
MAX NICHOLSON,
(Director General, Nature Conservancy, 1952-66),
13 Upper Cheyne Row, SW3.

From Mr John Theaker and others
Sir, Last July, without previous consultation, the Government announced its intention to dissolve the Nature Conservancy Council and to replace it by separate bodies responsible for England,

Police promotion

From Mrs Edwina Coven, JP

Sir, Sir Frederick Lawton's letter (June 13) on his experience of the changes in policing over the last 55 years sadly fails to provide the reasoned case he refers to in his first paragraph.

Linking juries' acceptance of police evidence with the old soldier character of the chief constable is bizarre. The majority of chief constables of pre-war days were, I am sure, gallant gentlemen but social figureheads, unqualified to manage a multi-million-pound organisation faced with a range of tasks utterly unheard of in those days. By 1945 it was apparent that retired officers were no longer capable of performing the increasingly demanding functions of a professional police.

Debate about present structures should not be confused by irrelevant references to a past that has gone for ever. Nor should it be

Eggs controversy

From Mr Kenneth Spencer

Sir, Nicholas Wood's comments (June 11) on the report by the Institute of Economic Affairs on the salmonella-in-eggs scare were welcome. We in the poultry industry have lost millions in slaughtered stock and in testing flocks and eggs, as a result of what Mrs Currie, the Public Health Laboratory Service and the news-hungry media publicised last year.

Many hundreds of producers have gone out of business, leaving the field open for the imports of foreign eggs from countries that have no salmonella control and which have no more than a cursory inspection at our ports. Yours faithfully, KENNETH SPENCER, Chairman, Kenneth Spencer Ltd, St Martin's Farm, Zeals, Wiltshire, June 13.

From Dr David G. Green

Sir, Nicholas Wood describes the Institute of Economic Affairs as a "Tory think tank". This claim is wholly incorrect.

The IEA is an independent research institute and a registered charity with no party-political connections whatsoever. We have Wales and Scotland. These proposals made little sense then and it is now clearer than ever that they are both an economic and a scientific nonsense.

NCC has around 800 permanent staff. Its own estimates indicate that to continue to provide the same standard of service and functions after the split will require an additional 400-600 people, at an annual cost to the taxpayer of between £30 million and £40 million. Most of the extra jobs required will not benefit nature conservation one whit. For each job in the NCC's Great Britain headquarters, currently located in Peterborough, there will in future have to be three - one in the Scottish agency, one in the Countryside Council for Wales and one in England.

The full financial implications of the division are only now beginning to dawn on DoE officials, who have commissioned a study to examine the possibility of retaining many of the service functions - publications, library, information technology, cartography, payroll, training etc - on a centralised basis. Even before the NCC is split therefore, government is having to consider ways of bringing it back together again.

In scientific terms too, the proposals are illogical and misconceived. To divide Britain into three units which correspond to old historical and cultural boundaries which are quite irrelevant to wildlife is, simply, backward-looking. It can only lead to the fragmentation of scientific expertise and to less effective nature conservation policy and practice.

Virtually all the voluntary nature conservation bodies in Britain are opposed to the Government's proposals. So is the overwhelming majority of NCC staff. So is most informed expert scientific opinion. So is the international nature conservation community. We appeal to the Government to think again.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN THEAKER, Trade Union, Side, NCC Scotland,
DAVID ROGERS, Trade Union, Side, NCC England,
IAN TILLOTSON, Trade Union, Side, NCC Wales, Nature Conservancy Council, Northminster House, Peterborough, Cambridgeshire, June 14.

observed by misleading comment, Sir Frederick, above most others, should be aware that a breach of judges' rules was never a discipline offence. Neither, I might add, would it necessarily be unethical.

Throughout the long development of the judges' rules there was considerable debate about their usefulness and validity by many erudite and respected lawyers as well as by more pragmatic policemen. To casually condemn a policeman for breach of a discipline offence that didn't exist and then to impute unethical conduct by every senior police officer for lack of action compares with deriding all judges for the crass decisions of the few so publicly commented on in the newspapers on a regular basis.

Yours faithfully,
EDWINA COVEN,
22 Cadogan Court,
Draycott Avenue, SW3,
June 13.

run many a mile to distance ourselves from all political parties. The IEA seeks to understand the limits and potential of competitive markets and aspires to discover that balance between the state and civil society which is most consistent with individual freedom. This mission transcends party politics.

Yours sincerely,
DAVID GREEN (Director, Health and Welfare Unit),
The Institute of Economic Affairs,
2 Lord North Street,
Westminster, SW10.

Stag-beetle woes

From Dr Meyrick Emrys-Roberts

Sir, Any nature-lover who has enjoyed the presence of stag beetles in the garden will join Mr E. J. Lacey (June 9) in his desire to conserve the species. But what can we do about the ravages of the magpie, which will gorge itself on the succulent body of the beetle, while cruelly leaving the legs to claw from the still-alive thorax?

Perhaps the apparent plague of magpies is more of a menace than car tyres or human feet. Yours faithfully, MEYRICK EMRYS-ROBERTS, The Old Post Cottage, Motcombe, Shaftesbury, Dorset, June 10.

Road sense

From Mr Peter Chambers

Sir, "Carriage-way repairs", says the sign on the cone-encumbered motorways. It needs a hyphen to get this polysyllabic message on to the board. Whatever happened to "Road up"? Too snappy for the Department of Transport? Too idiomatic for foreign drivers?

They have always got the "digging navy" warning sign, which is international and self-explanatory, whereas a Frenchman may well be puzzled by "carriage-way" when he thought the usual English word was - how you say - "road"?

Yours faithfully,
PETER CHAMBERS,
Martinsvale, Alkham, Dover, Kent, June 14.

Letters to the Editor should carry a daytime telephone number. They may be sent to a fax number - (071) 782 5046.

Applications close on 13 August 1990, with the Director-General of Health and Medical Services, State Health Building, 147-183 Charlotte Street, GPO Box 48, Brisbane, Queensland, 4001.

What problems will 'official' homeless shelters face? Sally Brompton consults an expert

Helping the helpless: Joanna Wade outside Carrington House, a hostel for homeless men in Deptford, south-east London, which is being closed down

Words from the street-wise

Joanna Wade has nothing against do-gooders. She is, after all, one herself, a shining example of the ability of committed volunteers to overcome all obstacles. But when it comes to the government's proposals to provide shelter for the homeless people sleeping rough on inner-city streets, she believes it is a job for highly-qualified professionals.

The government's plan to move the homeless into shelters is likely to be fraught with hazards, according to Miss Wade.

She is very well qualified to know. As the organizer of Crisis, the charity in London for the single homeless which provides shelter, food, clothing and medical care, Miss Wade has 14 years of first-hand experience of the administrative complications.

Simply finding a suitable empty building can prove a nightmare. "We ask help from everyone from commercial estate agents to the Church Commissioners," she says. Members of the public also telephone with suggestions about "an empty building around the corner".

Last year, it was not until the end of November that the Rover Group offered Crisis the use of a disused furniture warehouse in the Old Kent Road for the Christmas period after reading about their plight. Past sites have included a disused church, office, bus garage and factory floor.

"We have the advantage of being able to use temporarily empty buildings, while the government will need permanent places," Miss Wade says. "They can probably afford to pay rent but they will have to decide whether it is more viable to pay rent on a disused school or spend the money developing a derelict hostel.

"I think what is needed is a whole range of accommodation. Shelter alone is not the answer. Homelessness is not just about having a roof over your head. It is about having a permanent home and one that is suitable for your needs."

Until now, the responsibility for providing temporary hostels has rested mainly with the Salvation Army and a handful of minor charities. But now the problem has become a serious embarrassment to the government.

More young people are sleeping on the streets - the victims, according to the Salvation Army, of changes in social security benefits and incompatibility with parents, and at the same time there has been a failure of the care-in-the-community programme for former psychiatric patients.

Major George Whittingham, who runs the Salvation Army's community services, has noticed a growing attitude of aggression among many of the youngsters sleeping rough. Offers of hostel accommodation are invariably turned down because "they don't want to be institutionalised".

Miss Wade has also found the homeless to be increasingly demanding. "They are angrier and less obviously needy. You can't do good works with young people.

They don't want to know."

She believes that finding the correct qualified staff is vitally important if the government's scheme is to succeed. "It is not an easy field to work in and, while volunteers like us can scratch the surface, we don't have the skills or the energy to do it on a permanent basis."

"You need training and you need experience. Volunteers and charities should be there to provide the icing on the cake but the core of it has got lives in institutions."

Miss Wade, aged 32, is a solicitor and the only daughter of a retired BBC executive. Her involvement with the homeless began "rather ingloriously" as something to do between leaving a private school in north London and going up to Cambridge.

At her free-thinking politically-aware school, she had developed a desire to help those less fortunate. "We all had a very strong sense that we had a social purpose in life, that we were born to save the world in some way and that when the time was right we would receive a phone call."

She emerged after six days of working for Crisis "having turned a shade of grey and having had a very profound experience. I cried and cried for all the people who had to go back on the street and for myself because the experience had been so intense and now it was over."

Her full-time job as a partner in a liberal-minded firm of Greenwich solicitors specialising in legal aid cases enables her to take the necessary time off work to instigate the Open Christmas which is run by Crisis. The arrangements include dealing with the environmental health and fire officers, organising doctors, dentists and chiropodists, and borrowing a mass of equipment ranging from refrigerated trolleys and cooking facilities to showers and lavatories.

Because it is only a temporary shelter, a Christmas

'I think that what is needed is a whole range of accommodation. Homelessness is not just about having a roof over your head' to be run properly."

The whole approach has to be right, too. Miss Wade feels that much of the success of Crisis, which over the last 12-day Christmas period cared for about 1,500 people who came from all over Britain, is because it is temporary and lacks a hierarchy. "There is no 'them and us-ness', as there is in other organisations. It is a spontaneous encounter because the volunteers have no power and nor do the guests. We do not take names or insist people sleep on a special mattress and they do not have to have a bath."

She acknowledges that there will need to be some basic rules in the proposed shelters, but stresses "they have definitely got to be very uninstitutional. One of the main problems young homeless people have is that they have often spent much of their

The poisoned truth of those good old days

Food scares have been a frightening phenomenon of the past few years and yearnings are expressed for the wholesome fare of the "good old days", untainted by salmonella, listeria or BSE. But Food, Glorious Food, a book to be published tomorrow on food history as chronicled by Good Housekeeping magazine from 1922-42, reveals that such scandals were frequent as far back as the 1920s.

The compilers are Brian Braithwaite, the publisher of Good Housekeeping, and the magazine's editor, Noelle Walsh. They say that in 1923 Dr William Savage, who was described as "the man chosen by the British government to make full investigation of the canned food industries of England and America", was sounding off against "the panic recently created in the public mind by certain tragic cases of food-poisoning".

Dr Savage defended the safety of tinned foods, while at the same time warning of the dangers of some fresh products. Milk, he said, "is a great vehicle for the spread of disease, since not only is it liable to a good deal of bacterial contamination arising from want of care and cleanliness in collection, but also because bacteria find it a most suitable medium in which to grow and multiply."

As another example, butcher's meat is much more liable than bread to convey disease, since the former may come from a diseased animal and bacteria will rapidly multiply in it.

He dismissed worries of poisoning from the metal of the tin itself as "a very small one, although it looms large in public estimation", pointing out that "the Great War was a gigantic experiment in canned food consumption, but the writer is unaware of a single case of tin poisoning".

He concluded that although canned foods may spread disease by being infected with bacilli, "from this point of view they are generally safer than raw foods".

All of which sounds remarkably similar to some of the statements being made today by spokesmen for the food industry when they defend supposedly progressive processes. (Would we rather have mould than preservatives in bread, rancid fats than antioxidants - and would we abandon the convenience of cook-chill foods because of the slight risk of listeria?)

In an article published in 1924, Helena Normanton called for clearer food labelling and stringent standards.

There is a familiar flavour to the current alarms over food contamination

She cited one case in which 5,533 samples of tea out of 12,117 were unsatisfactory. And 22 years before Edwina Currie was born, she asserted that "egg and custard powders are a fairly constant source of complaint by public analysts". Some custard did not contain eggs at all, but merely "a tinted starch", and the egg products contained boric acid and arsenic. In a warning pre-dating the concern of groups such as Parents for Safe Food, she said that processed peas and fruit cordials were another danger. One cordial contained sugar solution, coal dye and phosphoric acid.

Perhaps when our women Members of Parliament have eradicated their inferiority complex, Miss Normanton suggested, "they will remember that... at present their constituents stand, on average, more than a thousand chances of being poisoned every year."

By 1927, some of the more dubious preservatives, such as boric acid, had been phased out and home refrigeration was more common.

Among the period advertisements reprinted in the book is one from 1924 for "Allinson Unadulterated wholemeal bread", headed: "The 20th century Health & Pure Food Crusade: White Bread danger exposed: adoption of Wholemeal advocated: Allinson's advice 'Eat natural food' now the rallying ground of medical opinion." At the same time, medical experts were predicting that the consumption of white bread could lower the health standards of the entire population.

In "What should a woman eat?", by Dr Cecil Webb-Johnson, in 1924, women were advised to avoid too much meat because of its "unpleasant consequences, for diseases of the kidneys and liver, cancer and increased blood-pressure" and to opt instead for poultry and game.

By wartime, Good Housekeeping was too busy telling readers how to make the best use of what food they could get to be allowed the luxury of complaining about its quality. But the introduction of the national wheatmeal loaf in 1942 whetted the appetite for debate.

Those who subscribe to The Times may remember the arguments waged in its columns for many weeks between eminent medical authorities, who saw bread as the instrument by which the obstinate general public could be forced to take their vitamins whether they would or no, one article in Good Housekeeping reported.

In the spirit of Helena Normanton, the magazine will campaign in its August edition for an independent food advisory committee, "funded by a levy on food manufacturers and retailers and sanctioned by the government". Noelle Walsh calls for a comprehensive food bill, and says that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has "lost the trust of the consumer, deservedly or not".

VICTORIA MCKEE
© Food, Glorious Food (Ebury Press, £11.95).
© Times Newspapers Ltd 1990

AT LAST, A PREMIUM LAGER THAT WON'T LEAVE YOU CLUELESS.

CLAUSTHALER. THE LOW-ALCOHOL PREMIUM LAGER. BREWED IN GERMANY.

Discover the romance of The Times.

Ever considered looking for Mr or Ms Right in our Saturday Rendezvous section? Over 35% of our readers are single, widowed, divorced or separated. Maybe one of them would like to share their life - and their paper - with you.

Call 071 - 481 4000 to place your advertisement. Whoever replies, you'll know you've already got at least one thing in common.

071-481 4000

MEET SOMEONE THROUGH THE TIMES

Priorities for non-pressing engagements

The name may be new, but the roll up, wrap round, easy wash, easy wear Yuki style is unmistakable

On the Princess of Wales's last night in Tokyo, during the royal visit to Japan in 1985, she went straight from the Emperor's banquet to the airport. One can imagine that the first thing she did before settling down for the long flight ahead was to take off the headband she had improvised from a Cartier sapphire and diamond necklace. And, if she had felt like curling up, still wearing her midnight blue evening dress, she could have done so without a qualm.

The "Fortuny" pleats in the long silky polyester dress by Yuki, the Japanese-born designer, would have behaved impeccably had she slept in them, and sprung back into perfect folds when she stood up again.

Clothes you can roll into a weekend bag, unpack the other end and step into without a crease have always been Yuki's speciality. Trained as a textile engineer in Kyoto, his understanding of how a fabric performs is crucial to the bias cut line and drape of dresses that are often held together with just one seam. He arrived in London in 1964, to study at the London College of Fashion, and a brief apprenticeship working alongside Pierre Cardin in 1969 gave him the courage to flaunt established principles of cut and experiment with the columns of silky jersey and dramatic robes in rippling pleats with which he made his name. He set up his own London fashion house in 1972, and throughout the Seventies his signature fluid line draped such stylish figures as Diana Rigg, Anouk Aimée, Natalia Makarova, Twiggy and Lady Diana Cooper.

Margaret Thatcher, before she assumed the iron-clad tailoring more suitable for a prime minister, was a regular customer. She also commissioned an Imperial blue dress (in chiffon) for a meeting with Emperor Hirohito of Japan.

A feel for fabric is also fundamental to the success of Yuki's latest collection of unstructured pieces in an Italian silky "peachbloom" Polyester that moulds itself flatteringly to the body and which he sells under a new label, Gnyuki Torimaru — his unabbreviated Japanese name by which he now wishes to be known.

Tokyo rose: the Princess of Wales, dressed by Yuki

Like many others in the fashion business, the Yuki label had its ups and downs over the past two decades. The formation of the new label is intended to mark the beginning of a new phase and a new design career. Many happy Yuki customers have rediscovered his easy, glamorous clothes in the shop in Belgrave, emboldened with his new name, that opened earlier this year.

Even the Princess of Wales has updated her wardrobe with some of the new high-performance, body-wrapping Torimaru styles which she wears off-duty and packs to shake out and wear on her Caribbean holidays.

Torimaru is the type of shop where you can also find a perfect bracelet by Eric Beamon, the jewellery designer, or a wide-brimmed hat that works with the clothes. Shoes, belts and bags are his own label designs, made under licence in Japan, where the wider range of Gnyuki Torimaru evening clothes, wedding dresses, sportswear and accessories is available.

Photographed here are a few of the glamorous pieces in his "flexible" wardrobe. The Polyester is washable ("Modern technology produces such luxurious cloth," he enthuses) and comes in luxuriously muted colours that range from neutral shades of taupe, vanilla, buttermilk, white and mushroom through to burnt orange or apple green. All seem to work well together.

Key pieces are a tie-front halter top, a long-sleeved body and a flattering cowl-neck vest that can be worn with long or short wrapped sarong skirts or wide-legged trousers. Anyone adept at draping and wrapping could wear one dress in numerous ways.

Shown here with a cross-over halter neckline, it can be twisted into a one-shouldered style and worn with or without a belt. One more flamboyant item might be his cowl-front body in Fortuny pleating that looks like a stunning swimsuit (the one that never gets wet, of course). There are flared jackets in a gauzy fabric, short or long enough for a coat.

"Clothes like these give tremendous freedom of mind," he says. "Comfort is important. There is a new cut with less construction, no facing or lining. I see these pieces mixed around, with the different 'body' tops worn for evening or day, even with jeans."

With just the one Gnyuki Torimaru shop in London it is lucky that these are the sort of clothes that can be confidently ordered by post. Sizing need not be too precise. "Just move a button and the size goes up or down by an inch or two," the designer says.

Above right: Cross-over halter dress in taupe peachbloom silky Polyester, £275. Beaten gilt cuff, £250, from Van Peterson, 117 Walton Street, SW3. Gilt drop earrings, £48, Butler & Wilson, 20 South Molton Street, W1; 189 Fulham Road, SW3; Harrods, SW1. Tassled belt, £45, Harrods, SW1

Above: Tie-front body in ivory peachbloom silky Polyester, £210; taupe sarong skirt, £210. Gilt cuffs, from £248; gilt drop earrings, £58, Butler & Wilson.

All clothes by Gnyuki Torimaru, 18 Eccleston Street, SW1 W9LT (071-628 5432). Mail order service is also available. Hair and make up by Wendy Sudd for Schumi. Photographs by JOHN SWANNELL.

RCA students dazzle in 'the best show in years'

THE zigzagging stripes of a trapeze tunic, hand-painted in liquid crystal, change colour from black to green to blue in the warmth of a spotlight. The caped collar of a parachute silk parka puffs up in the wind like a spinnaker at full sail. Such exuberant ideas, executed with pizzazz and professionalism and paraded by students graduating from the Royal College of Art in their degree show last week, provided a glimpse into the future of British fashion.

Amused tolerance a decade ago for the wacky ideas dreamed up by students content to take a stroll in a market and sell clothes run up on a kitchen table turned to criticism when the harsh realities of such a lack of professionalism had their effect on the industry. The commercial straitjacket in which fashion students found themselves by the mid-Eighties turned out competent designers, but threatened to suffocate their creative high spirits. But this year's graduates seem to have reached a happy compromise: forward-looking ideas produced with polish.

Links between the fashion industry and students are developing. Much of the best work shown last week was for projects set by Next Directory, Vivella Fabrics, working with Daniel Hechter, the French ready-to-wear company — and the International Wool Secretariat.

In his degree collection, Trevor Harrison, who won a Selfridges bursary to the RCA on graduating from Butley Art College, developed his spiralling zigzag cut in a stream of clever trapeze coats, tunics and shorts that mixed liquid crystal stripes with hand-edged printed primary bands and a blur of tie-dyed striped silks.

Philip Treacy's talent has already been discovered. Designers Victor Edelstein and John Galliano, as well as Harrods, have already commissioned hats from him, and his creations have been displayed in an exhibition at the Pompidou Centre in Paris. He already has a clientele for his towering millinery concoctions — up to 13 yards of organic twisted into a fly-away cone, or a weathercock hat pin securing a conical tush of straw.

Justin Oh, who adds movement with flying panels in skirts over slashed body suits in bronze jersey, has been signed up for a job with Yohji Yamamoto in Tokyo. Joshua Stephenson's loose shirt jackets in brogue-punched linen, suede and washed silk, Patrick Banville's "black tie" collection of oversized jackets cut like loose sweatshirts and sailing smocks, and Deborah Milner's desert robes all starred in the strong menswear department.

Harvey Bertram Brown's range of jangling bra tops, feathered shorts and crushed velvet skirts looked as though he had ransacked his fellow students' output in the metalwork and sculpture departments, but proved he was a confident stylist.

There was praise from Joseph Ettedgui, a proven spotter of talent from around the world. "So often we see the same ideas as we have seen in Paris reworked by the students," he said. "But this is a talented bunch." Jean Muir voiced the consensus when she said this was the best work seen at the RCA in years.

DENZIL MCQUELANE

Lift-off: Katherine Eyrre's billowing spinnaker collar

Sci-tech: Trevor Harrison's coat; Philip Treacy's hat

HOTLINE

Queueless sales cue

SALES are no longer the scrum they used to be, as many retailers follow the American system and clear stock regularly throughout the year. Bargains in the Selfridges sale, in Oxford Street, W1, will include crisp, brass-buttoned heavy cotton jackets from Saint Laurent Variation, his diffusion line, Paul Costelloe's red linen suits at £190 (down from £285) and Flora Kung wrapover silk dresses (£39), to spice a flagging summer wardrobe. The sale starts on June 26, at 9am.

The recently opened Designer Rooms in three House of Fraser stores (Dickins & Jones, W1; Kendals, Manchester and Frasers, Glasgow) are well stocked with labels such as Nicole Farhi, Miss Valentino, Mondri, Arabella Pollen, Basile and Caroline Charles. Prices have been cut by a third for the sale starting on Thursday.

At Simpson in Piccadilly, W1, a group of hot pink, jade and white linen waistcoats, skirts, culottes and shorts from Paul Costelloe's Dressage collection is also marked down by a third. The sale starts on Thursday, at 9am.

Shirt thrift

HILDITCH & Key, the shirt-maker, is one of the stores whose sale will keep up the tradition of oiling the wheels of commerce. The pink champagne will flow at 8.30am next Monday in all three London branches (37 and 73 Jermyn Street, SW1; 42 Beauchamp Place, SW3), an appropriate accompaniment to the bargains to be found in striped and plain mens' shirts at £39.95 (down from £69.95).

Greensloves

Also unbleached and undyed

5 High Street, Windsor SL4 1LD, Tel: (0753) 850124

TAPESTRY SPECIAL OFFER

Susanna Lisle's Cat tapestries have been tremendously popular with their charming, naive appeal. Last year she moved with her family from Dorset to Singapore, where her husband has been posted. Inspired by the rich, vibrant colours of the East she has designed her next pair of cat tapestries incorporating these new influences in her work. Her garlanded Cats, one sitting in front of a Thai temple, the other surrounded by parasols, are in soft shades of pink, yellow and cream. In contrast to this, the background scenes in both designs are a wonderful blaze of rich jewel-like colours: Azure blue, saffron and crocus yellow, emerald, lilac, Venetian red, magenta, sapphire and burnt ochre. They make magnificent cushions or framed pictures.

Quick and easy to make, they are stitched in either half-cross or tent-stitch on 10 holes to the inch canvas printed in full colour. Each design measures 14 in x 14 in and the kits come complete with canvas, needles, instructions and all the required wools from the Paterson tapestry range. All for $19.95 each, including postage and packing. When ordering use FREEPOST — no stamp needed.

FOR QUERIES ABOUT DESPATCH TELEPHONE 0794 99561. EHRMAN Kite Limited, 21/22 Vicarage Gate, London W9 4AA. Registered No. 1977932. Please allow 20 days for delivery. Money back if kit returned unused within 14 days.

To: EHRMAN, FREEPOST, LONDON W9 4BB

Please send me _____ tapestry kits at $19.95 each.

My choice is ☐ Thai Cat ☐ Cat With Parasols.

I enclose cheque/P.O. made out to EHRMAN for $ _____ (total)

Name _____

Address _____

TIME/90

ARTS

CLASSICAL MUSIC

Let's get metaphysical

John Casken, who was announced on Sunday as the winner of the first Britten Award for composers for his opera Golem, talks to Richard Morrison about the themes and aspirations of his music

On Sunday, a Durham University lecturer suddenly found himself £10,000 richer, and British music celebrated a new compositional star. It happened in the Red House, Aldeburgh (Benjamin Britten's former home) when John Casken was announced as the winner of the first Britten Award for Composition.

Funded by the Britten-Pears Foundation, the Award is now the most substantial prize for composers available in this country. It includes an undertaking by Virgin Classics to record the winning composition — in Casken's case, this will be his first opera, a 100-minute mythological work of extraordinary intensity called Golem, which was premiered at last year's Almeida Festival in Islington. And, of course, there is the money: "I'm not going to flatter it away," says Casken, an unpretentious and likeable 40-year-old. "I shall use it to create windows: more time to compose."

If that remark makes the Barnsley-born composer sound sensible and a shade dull, it is entirely misleading. His music crackles with pugnacity as it strives to convey huge metaphysical ideas. One side of him is a skilled craftsman, with an ability to produce superbly varied musical textures — sensuous, angry or delicate — which take in a variety of influences, but always end up sounding individual.

His other side is visionary, properly wild-eyed: he believes an artist must reflect on Man's dissatisfactions and the underlying reasons. "We try to pin our hope, or fix the blame, on external things." It can be capitalism, suggests Casken, or religion or computers. "But our problems can really be traced to what is within ourselves."

This is the theme of Golem. A rabbi moulds a robot-servant out of clay. But the experiment goes violently wrong, as experiments of this sort tend to do (see Frankenstein, Pygmalion and other close cousins). The robot develops human instincts: he lusts and kills. The opera's message appears to be that in all human creation there is an inevitable flaw: the human "master" never exactly knows where his creation will lead, and is therefore not its master at all.

"What people want of life, the future rather than the now; that is my subject matter," says Casken. He read music at Birmingham University, then studied in Poland, where he came into contact with Witold Lutoslawski. "People think that Poland taught me all about glittering musical surfaces. It didn't. Poland taught me to communicate directly, to say 'Let's cut the bull; here's the heart of it.'"

Whether his Polish period was primarily responsible or not, there seems little doubt that Casken's music succeeds in being accessible, not because it is particularly easy on the ear, but because of the powerful communicative urge behind it.

His pieces have been heard often at contemporary music festivals: he was the featured composer at Bath in 1980, Glasgow's Musica Nova in 1984, and Huddersfield in 1986. But, fittingly for someone who has just won the Britten Award, he is concerned not to become simply a darling of the metropolitan avant-garde. "Writing Golem released me from the burden of constantly thinking 'Where am I in relation to the avant-garde?' In opera, you can throw in bits of many styles, as long as they work dramatically. That is why today's audiences are so excited by opera: they respond to the multiplicity of images."

"Now I relish the composer's task to be useful on many levels. This Friday, for instance, a work of mine is being premiered at a college leavers' service in Durham. I happily accepted those limitations: non-professional singers, and the need to write music that was demanding but not impossible." His next "local" challenge will be to celebrate the arrival of Heinrich Schiff as musical director of the Tyneside-based Northern Sinfonia next season. Casken will write a cello concerto in which Schiff can both play the solo part and direct the orchestra.

Casken, who "literally went" when he first heard the BBC Singers perform his "Northumbrian elegy" To Fields We Do Not Know, was similarly choked when presented with the Britten Award. "First, it was a privilege simply to be in the Red House; then, it was an even greater privilege to be receiving an award for my first theatre work. But the honour of having the name of Britten, one of the century's greatest opera composers, linked to my opera; that was what really stunned me."

John Casken: The award will buy more time for composing Enigmatic Frenchman fails to draw the crowds

Twenty-five years ago, two giant figures in Romantic music seemed at last to be receiving the attention that was their due. Mahler's reputation, once established, has continued to soar. His symphonies are now played so often that some listeners are beginning to experience the unfortunate sensation of finding the apocalypses commonplace and the anguished confrontations with death unmoving.

But what of Hector Berlioz? After Colin Davis's superb performances and recordings, and David Cairns's marvellously witty paperback translation of Berlioz's Memoirs, it appeared that the enigmatic Frenchman was at last to be established in the British public's affection. Unfortunately, that has never quite happened. English sensibilities do not respond well to this particular Gallic puzzle. On the one hand the music speaks an ardent, feverishly romantic language; the language of a besotted lover who chased an actress across Europe, threatening to take his own life if she spurned him. (She did; he didn't.)

On the other, a detachment bordering on self-mockery threatens to break into any passage. A massive, militaristic funeral suddenly collapses into aural rhapsodies; rhythm, harmony and melody is never as four-square as the norm (as defined by Brahms and Wagner) leads us to expect. In short, Berlioz concerts disconcert. The Philharmonia's three Festival Hall events last week were linked by an increasing Berlioz presence: overture in the first (Le Corsaire), song-cycle in the second (Les nuits d'été). And in the third, well, exactly what is The Damnation of Faust? Oratorio is too pious a term for a work of such ambiguous moral sympathies; Berlioz invariably gives the devil the best tunes. Opera it certainly is not, though it has sometimes been staged. Its drama properly lies in its magnificent strokes of orchestral genius: the languid cor anglais solo in Marguerite's Romance; the diaphanous muted-string-writing in the Sylphs' episode; the relentless gallop and terrifying chord changes for the Ride to the Abyss; the swirls of the piccolo trio in the Invocation by Mephistopheles.

The Philharmonia, predictably, paid the Berlioz penalty: the first two concerts drew particularly poor houses. This was a pity, because the orchestra (and, in The Damnation, the Philharmonia Chorus) performed with verve and finesse throughout.

Perhaps, however, that reflects the conductor Charles Dutoit's uncertain reputation. For the last decade Dutoit and his Montreal Symphony Orchestra have been cleverly managed by a record company, Decca, encouraged to tackle the French repertoire which was once recorded so winningly for Decca by Ernest Ansermet.

That made sense, both commercially (it is an under-recorded area) and politically, given Montreal's leading place in Quebec's francophone cultural aspirations.

But in these Philharmonia concerts Dutoit only demonstrated that his conducting is too broad, bluff and heavy to be an ideal interpreter of music as sophisticated as Berlioz's. Time and again, moments which should send a shiver down the spine sounded dead in the soul department.

More suitable soloists might have helped. David Wilson-Johnson was a fine Mephistopheles: wicked, and wickedly funny. But Maria Ewing's timbre was patchy and sometimes too over-blown for the saintly Marguerite; and it is best not to dwell upon Jerry Hadley's attempts at the high-lying tenor passages of Faust.

RICHARD MORRISON

FESTIVAL: INTERARTFORUM, HUNGARY

Change without haste for Hungary

THERE is a rumour circulating in Budapest that the city's statue of Lenin, like many others in the country, is likely to end up in an outdoor museum in the former Gulag of Reck.

More than 500,000 Hungarians were imprisoned there without trial, tortured and killed in the notorious Rákosi era of the late Forties. Hungarians are characteristically cool about it. Unlike Poland, where Russified street signs have been torn down and replaced by hastily handwritten placards proclaiming their original names, Budapest's gracious Grand Boulevard remains Lenin körút.

Change there may be, but the idea of rapid volte-face is not an essentially Hungarian one. It is some measure of the nation's skill at integrating change with continuity that this year's Interartforum took place at all. Interartforum, as it was known until last year, was established 20 years ago as a triennial non-competitive platform for young musicians from East and West Europe. They play their party pieces in a week of recitals in the white and gold salons of one of Hungary's more delectable rococo palaces. Critics, concert agents and festival organisers are invited, names are signed, new chamber groups are enthusiastically formed.

Interartforum started as an enlightened initiative of Interkonekt, the state agency, and musicians nurtured by the enterprise have included the Panocha and Keller Quartets, Iloa Tokody, Dmitri Alexeev, Yuri Bashmet, Michael Collins, Nicholas Daniel, and the late Leeds prizewinner, Vladimir Ovchinnikov, an accompanist at an earlier Interartforum.

Now that Interkonekt has lost its monopoly, it offers no support to the breakaway, independent Interart Festivalcenter. Determined to vindicate its raison d'être as a non-competitive body, not bound by the market, Tamás Klenjanský, its director, took over responsibility for the rechristened Interartforum. Without time to find a deep enough cushion of sponsorship, he organised it on a knife-edge of administrative confusion and financial deficit.

Events returned, symbolically, to Haydn's Esterházy Palace where the first Interartforum was held. Even as young Romanian academy students tried to control the first Steinway their fingers had ever touched, urgent talks were going on about future co-operation and co-production with the European Association of Music Festivals and the World Federation of International Music Competitions. Managers such as Jørgen and Williams's David Sigall were being signed up to lecture on music-management in planned courses.

The real discoveries this year were in the field of chamber music. Oslo's Grieg Trio should be snapped up at once by both the Wigmore Hall and the Barbican's forthcoming Scandinavian festival. Solve Sigerland (violin), Ellen Margrete Flesjø (cello) and Vebjørn Anvik (piano) are barely out of college, yet so authoritative is their command of idiom, so energetic and imaginative their playing that they are already sought after in Italy, France, Germany and Holland.

The Trio Dante, formed five years ago by three students of the Sweelinck Conservatory in Amsterdam, found themselves filling up plenty of entrepreneurial diary space as well. Far-sighted musical thinking, robust individual virtuosity and a witty sense of style characterised the playing of Hein Wiedijk (clarinet), Larissa Groeneveld (cello) and Frank van de Laar (piano).

Singers such as the Moscow-trained baritone Evgeny Kapustin and the Romanian bass, Jan Tibrea, were warmly received, as the audience responded to the vivid colour and profile of the natural voice. It would take a good two years of coaching, though, to clinch any substantial deal in the West. On the other hand, musicians such as the whimsical and intelligent Czech guitarist, Jaromír Jezkova, and Andreas Gregor, the imaginative principal cello of the Staatskapelle, East Berlin, deserve to spring over into the West without more ado.

Accommodation for another motley band of musicians and fixers has already been reserved in the hills above Esterházy for 1993. Meanwhile, Interart Festivalcenter struggles to maintain a certain independence in a climate intoxicated with the competitive opportunities of the marketplace. Help from the British Council has been sought to set up a much-needed postgraduate course in music management; but so far Britain's fund for Eastern European management training seems to be earmarked for economics and technology alone.

HILARY FINCH

CRITICS' CHOICE: CONCERTS AND RECITALS

HALLE PROMS: Manchester-born Peter Donohoe takes the Beethoven trail through the Piano Concertos in successive Proms, opening tonight with No. 1 in C. James Judd conducts, and the Halle Orchestra and Choir, with baritone Willard White, perform Walton's dramatic Belshazzar's Feast. The Talks Fantasia (Vaughan Williams) begins the programme. Free Trade Hall, Peter Street, Manchester (061 834 1712), tonight, 7.30pm, £1.50-£10. Other Proms on Wed-Fri, all 7.30pm.

HUMMEL AND RIETZ: Peter Hough is set to repeat his breathtaking recording of Hummel's A minor Piano Concerto, followed by Thea King as the clarinet virtuoso in Rietz's G minor Concerto. Marcello Viotti conducts the English Chamber Orchestra, with Mendelssohn's Overture to the one-act Heimkehr aus der Fremde (Return from Abroad), written in London in 1829, and Schubert's Second Symphony.

Barbican Hall, Silk Street, London EC2 (071-838 8881), tonight, 7.45pm, £4-£15.

HEAR YE! Aaron Copland's recently recovered music for Ruth Page's 1934 ballet, Hear Ye! Hear Ye!, replete with jazz idiom for a Chicago night-club murder, has its European premiere at the Aldeburgh Festival. Oliver Knussen conducts the London Sinfonietta, also in Britten's radio music for The Sword in the Stone, and works by composers-in-residence Alexander Goehr (A Musical Offering) and Elliott Carter (Pentode). Snape Maltings, Snape, Suffolk (0728 433443), Wed, 8pm, £9.50-£16.50.

AFRICAN SANCTUS: David Fanshawe's choral tribute to a changing Africa through music derived from chants and dances is the climax to a Camden Choir programme with the London Instrumental Ensemble, Penelope Walsley-Clark (soprano) and Stephen Isserlis (cello). Also Leonard Bernstein's Chichester Psalms and Sir Michael Tippett's evocative Five Spirituals from A Child at Our Time, in support of Save the Children. Barbican Hall (as above), Wed, 7.45pm, £5-£15.

SCOTTISH PROM: Cambridge's celebrated Choir of King's College travels north for the Scottish National Orchestra's choral prom of Handel's rousing Cadogan the Priest, Haydn's celebratory "Nelson" Mass and Faure's consolatory Requiem. Stephen Cleobury conducts, with soloists Patricia Kwella, Ameral Gunson, John Mark Ainsley, Stephen Roberts, Kelvin Hall, Glasgow (041 227 5511), Thurs, 7.30pm, £2-£12. Other Proms on Fri, Sat, 7.30pm.

ELGAR-BRAHMS: First of three concerts placing Elgar's musical relationship to Brahms, ending the RPO's South Bank season. André Previn conducts the former's Cockaigne Overture and "Enigma" Variations, with Viktoria Mullova bringing her intensely felt playing to Brahms's Violin Concerto.

Festival Hall, South Bank, London SE1 (071-828 8800), Thurs, 7.30pm, £4-£20. Other programmes: June 26, July 1.

LEEDS FESTIVAL: Opening concert features English Northern Philharmonia conducted by Lothar Zagrosek, with the distinctive young talent of Tamsin Little as soloist for the premiere of 36-year-old Robert Saxton's Violin Concerto. Symphonies by Mozart (No 29 in A) and Mahler (No 4 in G, with soprano Joan Rodgers) begin and end the programme.

Town Hall, Leeds (0532 459351), Fri, 8pm, £1-£5.

SALISBURY HEATH: Ex-Prime Minister, Edward Heath, takes up the baton in support of Salisbury Cathedral's restoration fund, ministering to the National Symphony Orchestra in Brahms (Academic Festival Overture), Tchaikovsky (Fifth Symphony) and ending the distinguished pianist Paul Badura-Skoda in Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto. Salisbury Cathedral, Wiltshire (0722 20333), Sat, 7.30pm, £5-£25.

ALMEIDA'S X-FACTOR: After a pre-concert talk by the Greek-born composer Iannis Xenakis (at 6pm), Islington's Almeida Festival provides a retrospective assortment of his innovative work for solo voices and chorus, plus the commissioned premiere of Knephas, for 40 voices unaccompanied. James Wood conducts the New London Chamber Choir with mezzo-soprano Linda Hirst. Union Chapel, Compton Terrace, London N1 (071-359 4404), Sun, 7.30pm, £7-£0.

NORDIC NOTES: Sweden's acclaimed chamber orchestra, Musica Viva, has the Finnish conductor Petri Sakari for an all-Nordic programme. Sibelius and Nielsen give points of reference for works by Salinen, Rautavaara, Carlstedt and others, and the prize-winning Swedish twins, Urban and Jörgen Svensson, are soloists in Jalkanen's The Serf of Viro, for two violins and orchestra.

St John's, Smith Square, London SW1 (071-222-1081), Sun, 7.30pm, £3.50-£7.

NOEL GOODWIN

BORODIN PLAY BRITTEN: The skilful Borodin Quartet are renowned for their interpretations of Shostakovich; and Benjamin Britten had a particularly close musical relationship with the composer whose Fourteenth Symphony he conducted at its European premiere in Aldeburgh in 1970. So the Borodins visit Snape with Britten's Three Divertimenti of 1936 and Shostakovich's Quartet No 3 in F in a recital which begins with Schubert's Quartet in E flat, D87.

Snape Maltings (as above), tonight, 8pm, £9.50-£16.50.

BARSEG TUMANYAN: The Armenian bass-baritone who made a loud and loudly acclaimed debut at the Royal Opera's Gala Concert for Armenia in January last year, returns for his London recital debut, singing a programme of Rachmaninov, Mussorgsky, Tchaikovsky, Matusian and, believe it or not, Gershwin.

Wigmore Hall, Wigmore Street, London W1 (071-835 2141), Wed, 7.30pm, £4-£8.

THE SWEDISH NIGHTINGALE: Soprano Jenny Lind is celebrated by her compatriot, the indomitable Elisabeth Söderström, in a festival evening of the songs she sang interspersed with readings from her letters. Roger Vignoles is the pianist. Snape Maltings (as above), Thurs, 8pm, £13.50-£19.50.

ENSEMBLE PABLO CASALS: The Ensemble de Festival Pablo Casals, which includes the French violinist Bruno Pasquier and the young Romanian Peter Casals, comes to Wingfield Arts and Music Festival on an exchange visit with the French festival in Roussillon. Their programme includes Beethoven's B flat Trio, Mozart's Two Oboes (K 488), and Brahms's Quartet for piano and strings, Op 25.

Wingfield Church, Eye, Suffolk (037984 505), Thurs, 8pm, £5.50-£11.50.

XENAKIS IN ISLINGTON: The Almeida Festival's Xenakis celebration begins with a duo virtuoso display by Robin Carter (piano) and James Wood (percussion) who play his "Rebonds" and "Paspapha" including works by Takemitsu and Barry Guy.

Almeida Theatre, Almeida Street, London N1 (071-359 4404), Fri, 7.30pm, £5.50.

PASTIME WITH GOOD COMPANY: A concert of songs, dances and ensemble pieces by The Early Music Group will extend to dancing on the bowling green of the National Trust's Cottehele House in Cornwall. If it rains, the event will be postponed until July 1. Cottehele, St Dominick, Cornwall (0208 74281), Sun, 2.30pm, free.

SIGNS AND TRAINS: The Kronos Quartet return to London for a programme which includes a work inspired by the threatened culture of a small Romanian village. Istvan Marta's "Doom: A Sign" is flanked by a quartet by Peter Soufforge which draws on Aboriginal chant, and a second performance of Steve Reich's piece for quartet and tape, "Different Trains". Festival Hall (as above), Mon, 7.30pm, £7.50-£12.50.

SCALFI AT ST JOHN'S: Milan-born Jacopo Scalfi is a young cellist of unusual refinement and lyrical artistry, recalling the playing of Pierre Fournier. His Wigmore debut two years ago was warmly greeted: now he brings, with his pianist Julius Drake, Martinů's Variations on a Slovak Folk Song, Beethoven's A major Sonata and Shostakovich's D minor Sonata.

St John's (as above) Mon, 7.30pm, £4-£7.

HILARY FINCH

31st Antiquarian Book Fair
PARK LANE HOTEL, PICCADILLY, W1
June 19-21
11am to 8pm (last day 11am to 6pm)
Under the auspices of
THE ANTIQUARIAN BOOKSELLERS' ASSOCIATION
Telephone: 071-379 3041

Rimma SUSHANSKAYA
'One of the greatest violinists alive today.'
Washington Post, 26 October 1988
Concert Tour in Britain
June - July 1990

25 June	MARLBOROUGH FESTIVAL with James Walker
29 June	BRISTOL with English String Orchestra
30 June	LONDON, St John's Smith Square, with English String Orchestra
4 July	MANANAN FESTIVAL, Isle of Man, with James Walker
6 July	MANANAN FESTIVAL, Isle of Man, with Northern Chamber Orchestra
14 July	WARWICK ARTS CENTRE with BBC Concert Orchestra
19 July	MID-SUFFOLK FESTIVAL with James Walker
22 July	CHURCH STRETTON FESTIVAL with James Walker

Followed by a tour of Finland, Soviet Union and USA
For further details contact Mrs S. Williams, Tel: 0789 66272

PIACOSI, MATTESE AND OTHER TWENTIETH-CENTURY
MODERN MASTERS
THE JACQUES AND NATASHA GELMAN COLLECTION
ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS
21 APRIL-15 JULY
BROUGHT TO BRITAIN BY GUINNESS PLC

Tomorrow: Mannekins:
Barry Millington on the first British performances of the Polish opera by Zbigniew Rudzinski. Plus: Andrew Gibbon Williams on Kees van Dongen and James Ensor shows in Paris, and Sheridan Morley's television review

"THIS IS HOW YOUTH THEATRE SHOULD BE"

Lloyds Bank Theatre Challenge

THE SECOND YEAR OF THIS HIGHLY ACCLAIMED FESTIVAL
FEATURES 12 GROUPS FROM ACROSS THE U.K.

10-11-12 JULY 1990-7.00PM OLIVIER THEATRE

RETURNS ONLY

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CALL ADRIAN BENDON ON 071-422 0741

REVIEWS

Punditry without a point

RADIO

ENTROPY is the natural tendency of a system to unravel when in disequilibrium — an English attack on goal, for example, essayed with an excessively bouncy football on unfairly lively Italian turf. The principle obtains both in the expanding cosmos and in the proliferation of radio stations, which are increasingly less subject to regulation by statute and whose channels increasingly pollute the known universe (a disc-jockey is hovering outside my window).

Here and there, however, complex adaptive systems arise to impose order where none previously existed. A good mundane example would be the Midlands Radio Action Trust (MRAT), a conduit for public service broadcasting (Aids, heart disease, "isshos") which is commercially sponsored and therefore benefits both the "image" and the coffers of the stations involved. No law of man or physics compels this dispensation: here we have nothing less than the market forces of existence.

I know of MRAT from the first part of Sunday's The Radio Programme (Radio 4), an even better example of ostensibly random bits and pieces cohering into the semblance of a unity. There is, to be sure, a format: Laurie Taylor devotes 10 minutes to rooting around in a media backwater and another 20 to mopping up a lake of opinion from a cabal of pundits, each of whom has listened to the same programmes in the preceding week. Equilibrium is not hard to maintain in the studio; lack of balance is precisely what is attributed to the works under review. Why, oh why, did not Charles Wheeler's Hindsight job on London smog mention the deathly hush which that phenomenon entails?

"The critical listener's guide" is stitched together by Professor Taylor as a kind of prime mover of broadcasting, who signals his mastery of matter by chucking during the prepared speeches of his interviewees. No doubt this is meant encouragingly, but since there is no discernible reason for it, the listener (critical or otherwise) is left feeling like a blind watchmaker who fears his latest effort may inadvertently have Mickey Mouse on its face. Fifteen billion years of creation have surely not reached their apogee in feeble slot-fillers such as this.

From White Noise to a Symphony (Radio 3, also Sunday) suggested an alternative peak of organisational endeavour. Having exhausted, or become chuffed off with, the standard fields of scientific inquiry, great brains of all nations have now invented a discreet academic discipline which seeks to examine the nature of complexity and, where possible, derive simple laws from their findings. This enables them to sport the laurels of the polymath, while at the same time opening up immense fresh pastures of grant-generation.

Laurie Taylor: presenter of The Radio Programme on Radio 4

At one point in Paul Davies's amiable and unpretentious documentary an American prof with an almost audible beard entertained the notion of asking a cultural illiterate to recreate a Jackson Pollack drip-painting on the basis of telephonic instructions. The exercise would, he said, have a "very high algorithmic information content".

MARTIN CROPPER

FESTIVAL

Europas 3 & 4

Almeida, Islington

SIX opera singers, not in stage costume, face the audience and each delivers an aria with palpable intensity and conviction, while pianists on each side of the platform render transcriptions of familiar operatic numbers. What makes this different is that it is all happening simultaneously.

The singers have selected, in advance, items by Wagner, Verdi, Bizet and many others, and they have been thrown in the melting pot by John Cage along with the piano transcriptions, and a collection of 78 rpm records, which are systematically worked through by a troupe of six gramophone operators. "Nothing relates to anything else except by coincidence," Cage hastens to inform us about his Almeida commission, Europas 3 & 4.

He may be doing himself an injustice: it would be difficult to imagine pure chance being entirely responsible for such unfruitful, not to say painful, juxtapositions. Surely there must have been some rigging to ensure that no contribution ever sounded well with another, or threw light on it, or on the work as a whole?

Cage has done more than most to redefine notions of composition, not least in his famous 4'33" which, by prescribing silence from the platform, draws audience and ambient noise into the sphere of art. His confrontation with the European operatic tradition — he claims to be sending back what we have inflicted on America for the past century or so — is a potentially engaging one.

By the end of Europa 3 (precisely 70 minutes long), I found myself looking back on the European operatic tradition more wistfully than ever, and wishing Cage had extended his 4'33" idea into his operatic venture.

Jane Manning, Hilary Western, Eleanor Bennett, Paul Wilson, Adrian Clarke and Roger Bryson are the intrepid soloists, holding their own, and their pitch, against the odds. James Clapperton, momentarily provoked the suspicion that there might be a creative intelligence behind Europas after all.

BARRY MILLINGTON

THEATRE

Theatertruffen

Berlin

GERMANS take their theatre as seriously as they take everything else, and in this era of reunification they take it more seriously than ever. West Berlin's 27th annual Theatertruffen (Theatre Meeting) brought 11 of the past season's best German-language productions together in a two-week festival. For the first time, it included productions from the GDR and was able to use East Berlin theatres to house visiting productions. It also brought together experts from East and West to discuss the seemingly endless economic and ideological dilemmas which now beset German theatre.

At its best, German theatre has few peers. Although the Theatertruffen awards no prizes, much of what it offered evoked the great pre-war Berlin of Brecht and Reinhardt. But it also included a certain amount of material which approached involuntary self-parody of the most solemn Germanic kind. That reached its climax in a mimed production ("choreographed by the Brecht") by the Bremen Theatre, starkly entitled Ulrike Meinhof, which purported to deal with the issues raised by the Baader-Meinhof terrorists. This opened with the company writhing around on the floor, amid contemporary non-biodegradable detritus, underneath electric advertising for "Mac Burger". The performers then gorged themselves on prop junk-food, and rushed to a row of large laundry tubs upstage for a protracted orgy of mass vomiting, a truly unforgettable theatrical experience.

From Bochum, in the grimy Ruhr, came the adventurous Schauspielhaus company in Andrea Brecht's courageous and imaginative production of Maxim Gorky's drama The Last Ones, which has almost consistently met with failure from its beginning. (As an index of this company's seriousness, the printed programme included the play's complete text.) The performance won cheers from audience and critics.

Both Strauss, a sometimes maddening but never less than stimulating playwright, contributed Visitors, in Hamburg's Thalia Theatre production, designed and staged by Wilfried Minks. A play about the rehearsing of a play, Visitors featured several exceptional performances, foremost among them that of Will Quadflieg, who over the decades has progressed from the status of young hero to that of widely acknowledged old master. The unobtrusive but brilliant technique of his virtuoso performance made it a seminar in the art of ensemble acting.

From East Berlin came George Tabori's Mein Kampf — a black farce about Adolf Hitler, if you can imagine that — in Thomas Langhoff's Gorki Theater production. How times have changed. During my 25-year sojourn in Berlin, the Gorki specialised in hortative dramas adhering closely to the party line; its current repertoire includes One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, Amadeus and Genet's The Maids.

Mein Kampf focused on Adolf Hitler's early days, almost starving in a Vienna shelter for the homeless, in consternation over the spontaneous, unconditional friendship of an old Jew there. The play has numerous rough spots, not to mention long stretches of boring ineptitude, but occasional flashes of brilliant theatricality at least partially redeem it.

It is not easy to forget the fate of a pet hen which is first seen live on stage but subsequently encountered, ostensibly, already plucked and methodically dissected by a storm-trooper bully-boy, who gave the audience an energetic running lecture about his handiwork with all the objective detachment of Heinrich Himmler justifying the extermination camps. It would hardly be surprising if many of the audience left that performance vegetarians.

After the war, the theatres of the German Democratic Republic established a proud record. Brecht's Berliner Ensemble (which since his death has fallen off deplorably) reigned for a considerable time as probably the finest repertory company since the Moscow Art and the Abbey; Walter Felsenstein's Komische Oper established its Austrian founder and longtime spiritus mentor as the greatest theatrical genius since Stanislavsky.

The recent perforation of Germany's borders brought an agonising migration of theatrical personnel, forcing companies to revise and alter their programming, as East-West breach of contract became commonplace.

One example suffices: an ordinary stage-hand at West Berlin's Deutsche Oper earns a larger sum, in West German marks, than the Komische Oper's chief designer himself in East German marks. When the West German mark becomes the sole German currency in July, no one dare predict its effect on East German theatrical and operatic companies.

One sardonic East German theatrical expert, only slightly overstating the case, compares East Germany's theatres with Latin America's newly "discovered" natives: innocently, even eagerly, swapping gold in exchange for glass beads.

PAUL MOOR

NEW RELEASES

THE INTRUDER: Roger Corman's punchy drama from 1961 about a racist (William Shatner) slaying up trouble on the beach. Plus Wheeler's mastery Touch of Evil, both in new prints. RCA Cinema (071-630 3647).

MISS FRIEDMANN: Pop. Enigma's version of Bertie's play about a feisty Messianic mess (Holly Hunter) determined to end the local talent contest. With Mary McCormack, Tim Robbins. Odeon Cinema (071-630 6644/5).

MUSIC BOX (15): Costa-Gavras's anguished, shattering drama about a Chicago criminal (Jessica Lange) deliriously her father from accusations of war crimes. With Anne Parillaud. Odeon Cinema (071-630 7687).

THE PHANTOM OF THE OPERA (15): Harry Alan Towers's tedious variation on Gaston Leroux's story of a blind, disfigured man who sings in the mould of Jack the Ripper. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

SKI PATROL (PG): Tremendously broad and broad as the Ski Patrol Lodge, from the producer of the Police Academy series, with Roger Moore, Martin Mull. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310).

A TALE OF SPRINGTIME (U): Eric Rohmer's absorbing study of the games people play, with Florence Darin as a capricious teenager trying to push her new friend (Jessica Lange) into her father's arms. A Caledonia (071-353 3742) Lumiere Cinema (071-630 0681).

TREASURE ISLAND (PG): An old favourite deftly filmed by Jonathan Heston's son, Fraser, with Michael Caine as Long John Silver, Christian Bale as Jim, and a rollicking cast of British stars. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE HUNT FOR RED OCTOBER (PG): Sean Connery as a Soviet submarine commander trying to defect. Ponderous pre-planned drama. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

INTERNAL AFFAIRS (18): Richard Gere and Andy Garcia, as Los Angeles cops sucked into a vortex of insanity and corruption. Tired thriller, given some kick by Steve Buscemi. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

JOHNNY HANDSOME (15): Gering, unimpressive action film from director Walter Hill, with Mickey Rourke as a disgraced cop who plans a double-cross following classic suspense. With Ellen Barkin. Cannon Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE KRAVYS (18): Brooding, bloody drama about the rise and fall of the East End gangsters, from war-time childhood to incarceration in separate prisons. Peter Medak directs an eminently chosen cast: Gary and Martin Kemp, Billie Whitelaw. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

MONSIEUR HIRE (15): Intense, stylish version of Simon van der Meer's dark obsession with his neighbour: a sinister achievement by director Franco. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

CLEAN AND SOBER (15): Aggressively bleak portrait of the difficulties of breaking a cocaine habit, with Michael Caine as a police officer who has been in rehab. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

CREATOR (15): Frustrating black comedy, somewhat aided by its title. With Peter O'Toole — delightful as a nutty scientist trying to bring his dead wife to life. With Margaret Hamilton, Vincent Spano. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

DIAMOND SKULLS (18): Gutsy tale of the enigmatic last act, with Gabriel Byrne as a jaded detective, Amanda Donohoe, Michael Hordern, director, Nicholas Bromfield. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

CINEMA GUIDE

Geoff Brown's assessment of films in London and (where indicated) with the symbol (S) on release across the country.

DREAMS (PG): Akira Kurosawa's festival of violence, ecology, and the artist's urge to create: uneven, a touch naive, but a visual feast. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

HARD TO KILL (18): Steven Seagal as a cop emerging from a seven-year coma to avenge himself on his assailants. Lacks any action fare, with Kelly Le Brock. Cannon Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

HARLEQUIN NIGHTS (15): Tired, vulgar period tale about a nightclub threatened by a corrupt crime boss, an unimpressive vehicle for Eddie Murphy (famously serving as writer, director and star). Cannon Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE HUNT FOR RED OCTOBER (PG): Sean Connery as a Soviet submarine commander trying to defect. Ponderous pre-planned drama. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

JOHNNY HANDSOME (15): Gering, unimpressive action film from director Walter Hill, with Mickey Rourke as a disgraced cop who plans a double-cross following classic suspense. With Ellen Barkin. Cannon Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE KRAVYS (18): Brooding, bloody drama about the rise and fall of the East End gangsters, from war-time childhood to incarceration in separate prisons. Peter Medak directs an eminently chosen cast: Gary and Martin Kemp, Billie Whitelaw. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

MONSIEUR HIRE (15): Intense, stylish version of Simon van der Meer's dark obsession with his neighbour: a sinister achievement by director Franco. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

CLEAN AND SOBER (15): Aggressively bleak portrait of the difficulties of breaking a cocaine habit, with Michael Caine as a police officer who has been in rehab. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

CREATOR (15): Frustrating black comedy, somewhat aided by its title. With Peter O'Toole — delightful as a nutty scientist trying to bring his dead wife to life. With Margaret Hamilton, Vincent Spano. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

DIAMOND SKULLS (18): Gutsy tale of the enigmatic last act, with Gabriel Byrne as a jaded detective, Amanda Donohoe, Michael Hordern, director, Nicholas Bromfield. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

THE DUCHESSE OF MALR: Harriet Walter's movingly erotic vision in Webster's murky homonym. Cinema Cinema (071-353 5096) Oxford Street (071-630 0310) Prince Charles (071-437 8181) Whiteleys (071-792 3303/3304).

WORD-WATCHING

Answers from page 22

AUTOFRUCTIFEROUS (b) Parthenogenic, an otiose and mongrel (ie of mixed origins from different lines) word from the Greek autos self + the Latin fructifer bearing fruit. Fruits, before Oedipus' execution, were known of their part in generation, and regarded skirted women as autofructiferous.

SPEOS (a) A grotto-temple or tomb, mainly found in Hellenistic Egypt, the headland of the cult of preservation after death, from the Greek speos a cave. "Pisbi has always had the head of a lioness, and the title 'The Lady of the Excavation' or 'Speos'."

JACCO (a) A corrupt form of jockey, itself a corruption of the Turkish chak. "The Clergy have ever held with the mighty as the Jacco hunts with the Lyon."

JACCHUS (a) A South American mammal, Callithrix, from the Latin jacchus, from the Greek jakchos Bacchus, presumably from its appearance, or drunken behaviour.

BBC 1

6.00 Cee-fax.
6.30 BBC Breakfast News 8.55 Regional news and weather.
9.00 News and weather followed by The Travel Show (Cee-fax) 9.35 Play Tennis. A beginners' guide (r).
10.00 News and weather followed by The Raccoons. Cartoon.
10.25 Children's BBC. Playdays 10.50 Stopit and Tidyp (r) 10.55 Five to Eleven (r).
11.00 News and weather followed by Hudson and Halls. The camp Kiwi cooks with Grace Kennedy (r).
11.30 Tricks of the Trade (r).
12.00 News and weather followed by Dallas (r). (Cee-fax).
12.50 The Travel Show UK Mini Guides. Lynne Regis (r) 12.55 Regional news and weather.
1.00 One O'Clock News with Philip Hayton. Weather. 1.30 Neighbours. (Cee-fax).
1.50 Royal Ascot. Julian Wilson introduces live coverage of the first day, heralded by the spectacular pageant of the traditional Royal Drive. Jeff Banks from The Clothes Show picks out the most brilliant fashions, including the Queen Anne Stakes (2.30); the Prince of Wales's Stakes (3.05); and the St James's Palace Stakes (3.45). Northern Ireland: 2.15 Open House 4.00 Dickipick. A beginners' guide to car care.

4.10 Children's BBC: Happy Families. (r) 4.25 New York Bear Show. (r) 4.35 Teenage Mutant Hero Turtles 4.55 Newsround 5.05 Coast to Coast Monday. Part one of a seven-part Australian drama series (r).
5.35 Neighbours (r). (Cee-fax). Northern Ireland: Sportsweek 5.40 Inside Ucker. 6.00 Six O'Clock News with Peter Sissons and Anna Ford. Weather.
6.30 Regional News Magazines. Wales: Wales Today. Northern Ireland: Neighbours 6.55 Inside Ucker. Update.
7.00 Style Trial. Helen Atkinson Wood is joined by comedians Simon Fanshawe and Susie Stake, and DJ John Walters, who together pry into the private lifestyles of hapless members of the public.
7.30 EastEnders. (Cee-fax) 8.00 To the Manor Born. (Cee-fax).

8.30 Black in Blue: Crime and Prejudice. The perennial misdeeds of Desmond Wilcox's revealing documentary on the black and Asian recruits to the Metropolitan Police. Five of the recruits have graduated from "puppy weeks" and have to face the beast on their own. (Cee-fax).
9.00 Nine O'Clock News with Michael Buerk. Regional news and weather.
9.30 Chin! The convulsed and overindulged Eurotrash thriller comes to a climax with Cee-fax and McKee out to break the shady consortium run by property developer David Lynton.
10.25 Film 90 Special with Barry Norman: New York Stories. Barry Norman visits the Big Apple and takes a bite into films in production, including Godfather II and Battle of the Vantiles. He also previews Back to the Future II and Dick Tracy.
11.00 World Cup Report. Highlights of the final matches in groups A and D. Italy v Czechoslovakia, Austria v USA, West Germany v Colombia and Yugoslavia v UAE.
11.45 Royal Ascot. Highlights.
12.10 News. Ends at 12.15

BBC 2

7.10 Open University: Return to Base. Ends 7.35.
8.00 News.
8.15 Westminster. Yesterday's parliamentary proceedings.
9.00 Daytime on Two. The differing behavioural attitudes of girls and boys 9.20 The Radio Data System 9.40 How animals, plants and people have adapted to the arid conditions of the Arab world 10.00 Science for younger viewers 10.15 A-level German 10.40 How an English village has changed over the years 11.00 The seashore 11.15 A-level Economics 11.35 How to develop an economic awareness across the curriculum 12.12 Industrial management techniques can be introduced into the classroom 12.40 Watch 12.55 Warming and communication skills 1.20 Charlie Chalk 1.35 Hip hop music.
2.00 News and weather followed by You and Me. For younger viewers (r).
2.15 Sign Extra (r) 2.40 Made by Man. How basket-makers learn their craft 2.55 The Travel Show Traveller. West Germany (r).
3.00 News and weather followed by Westminster Live including prime minister's question time.
3.50 News and weather followed by regional news.
4.00 Royal Ascot. Takes over coverage of the royal event from BBC1, featuring the Coventry Stakes at 4.20. Introduced by Julian Wilson.
4.35 World Cup Grandstand. Desmond Lynam introduces live coverage of the second-half football between West Germany and Colombia, the final match in group D. Also highlights of the match between Yugoslavia and the United Arab Emirates.
6.00 Laurel and Hardy in Another Fine Mess (1929, b/w). Stan and Ollie find themselves serving at the residence of Colonel Bushcott.
6.25 Film: Bambi (1936, b/w). More comic mishaps with Stan and Ollie, who play a couple of gypsies entrusted with the care of a count's kidnapped daughter. Directed by James W. Horne and Charles Rogers.
7.35 Biko (b/w). Biko's Vampire. More classic American comedy with the fast-talking sergeant (r).

8.00 Open Space: Breaking the Ice. The comedy programme slot offers a trio of films about popular art in the north east of England which would probably have warmed the heart of Raymond Williams (see Channel 4, 9.00pm) since they show popular activities initiated by the people instead of being imposed upon them. The theme of the films is that ordinary folk can be artists, even if they are mentally handicapped, whether they are decorating a tablecloth, writing poems or forming themselves into an all-women's band. For the women making music is a political as well as a creative activity, an assertion that their sex should not bar them from a traditional male activity, while among the amateur poets of Cleveland is one who is valiantly keeping alive the Yorkshire dialect.

The spirit of Zen: Sony's Walkman (8.30pm)

8.30 Designing Classics: The Sony Walkman. An excellent series returns strongly with a fascinating voyage around a phenomenon of post-war Japanese technology which has taken on a plethora of meanings, aesthetic, cultural and even psychological. The technical story starts with the invention of the tape player and those wonderful Sony people and their endlessly inventive boss, the "samurai of the transistor", Akio Morita. Punctuating the myth a little, a Sony man reckons that the Walkman was stumbled on rather than planned, and the design guru Stephen Bayley suggests it arose out of competition between two divisions within the company. But the film convincingly relates the Walkman to the Japanese love of the miniature, bonsai trees and all that and even to the spirit of Zen and the creation of private worlds. With the Japanese tea ceremony also involved to provide a parallel, the Walkman emerges as less a gadget than a profound expression of Japanese culture. The 1990s model, it seems, could be oval. (Cee-fax).

9.00 Alexei Sayle's Stuff: Tinkering with Teeth. More irreverent humour (r).
9.30 Present Imperfect: Loveless in Leithworth.
● Paul Watson's documentary is a lengthy discourse on the fecklessness of men, as experienced by two single parent mothers living on a Hertfordshire council estate. Alison had a brief affair with a British soldier in Germany and became pregnant. Her son, now two, has been difficult since and is in and out of hospital. He has had 11 operations. The father refuses to have anything to do with the mother or child and while he is stationed abroad is protected from any legal proceedings for maintenance. The army will not help. Alison knows Sue has been left with a daughter to bring up after her husband walked out. She is depressed, on pills and never without a cigarette. Trapped in their homes and desperately short of money, the women pour out their feelings. Alison says she feels better just for being able to chat to the camera. They are torn between the desire to have a man around and the determination to work out their own lives. (Cee-fax).
10.30 Newsnight with Donald MacCormick.
11.15 The Bill Moyers Interview. An interview with Dr Gary Berrington, reputed to be the "Dr Spock of the 1980s". As a leading paediatrician, Brazelton is well aware of the stresses of parenthood and describes experience as learning from mistakes.
11.45 One on Two: Dead Good Friends. Jo Brand. Alison's knowledge of the comedy circuit, was once a psychiatric nurse in a high-security mental hospital. In this monologue, written by her, she plays a morician whose best friends are all dead.
11.55 Weather.
12.00 Open University: Family Centre. Ends at 12.05pm

ITV LONDON

6.00 TV-am.
9.25 Chari Letters. Word game hosted by Alan Stewart 9.55 Thames News and weather.
10.00 Out of This World: I've Got a Secret. More comic adventures with the alienese teenager.
10.30 This Morning. Magazine series presented by Judy Finnigan and Richard Maury. With national and international news at 10.55 and regional news at 11.55 followed by national weather.
12.05 Red, Jane and Freddy: Tristan (r).
12.25 Home and Away 12.55 Thames News and weather.
1.00 News at One with John Suchet. Weather.
1.20 Coronation Street (r).
1.50 A Country Practice. Medical soap set in a rural Australian town 2.20 Take the High Road. Drama series based around the sleepy Scottish village of Glendaroch.
2.50 Connections. Simon Potter hosts the latest edition of his 3.15 news headlines 3.20 Thames News and weather.
3.25 Families. Anglo-Australian soap series.
3.55 Children's ITV: Oh! Mr Toad 4.20 Phoenix Hall 4.50 Scobey Doo. Spooky cartoon capers with the lovable loopy (r).
5.10 Blockbusters. Bob Holness hosts the general knowledge quiz.
5.40 News at 5.40 with Fiona Armstrong. Weather.

6.00 Home and Away. Australian soap about the eventful lives of the residents of Summer Bay (r) 6.30 Thames News and weather.
6.45 Emmerdale. The ups-and-downs of a Yorkshire farming community. (Oracle).
7.15 The Bill: Tactics. Superb police series. Burnsie's rough methods are becoming increasingly unpopular with his superiors and Det Chief Inspector Wray has to put him back on the straight and narrow. (Oracle).
7.45 World Cup 86: Italy v Czechoslovakia. Live from the Olympic Stadium in Rome. Eton Welsby and Graham Taylor introduce the match that will help to settle the destiny of group A. Italy, one of the favourites, may have too much class for the Czechs but both should go forward to the next stage. The programme also features highlights of half and full time of the other group A match between Austria and the United States.
10.00 News at Ten with Alastair Burnet and Trevor McDonald. Weather 10.30 Thames News and weather.
10.35 Film: The Amityville Horror (1979). James Red, Margot Kidder and Rod Taylor in a polished tale of the supernatural, supposedly based on a true story, which has spawned three inferior sequels. Four years after a night of bloody horror, the Amityville house is bought by a family at a ridiculously low price. They soon regret it. Directed by Stuart Rosenberg.
1.00am Video View. Manella Frostrup with the best videos to rent and buy. With a review of Scenes from the Class Struggle in Beverly Hills, and an interview with rising British actor Hugh Grant

1.30 Kojak: When You Hear the Beep, Drop Dead. More crime-busting from the lolly-lucking cop (r).
2.30 Denarius: Women Who Stay with Cheating Husbands. Phil Donahue and his studio audience and guests discuss what makes a woman stay with a man who has extramarital affairs.
3.30 Quiz Night. Ross King hosts the pub and club quiz.
4.00 Entertainment UK. The latest films, music and entertainment from around the country.
5.00 ITN Morning News with Guy deFay. Ends at 6.00

CHANNEL 4

6.00 The Art of Landscape. Soothing music set to stunning images.
6.20 Business Daily.
6.30 The Channel Four Daily presented by Carol Barnes.
9.25 Schools.
12.00 The Parliament Programme presented by Sue Cameron 12.30 Business Daily.
1.00 Sesame Street. Pre-school learning series.
12.00 In the Club? - Birth Control This Century: Every Child a Wanted Child. A look at the impact birth control has had on people's lives (r).
2.50 Black Forest Clinic: A Child, A Child, A Child. Dour medical drama set in a German hospital (r).
3.40 The Oprah Winfrey Show: Celebrity Daughters Dressing Up Mum. Miss America and stars from the soaps Dallas and Falcon Crest bring their mothers on stage and give them a completely new look.
4.30 Fifteen-to-One. William G. Stewart hosts another quick-fire edition of the general knowledge quiz.
5.00 The Lone Ranger (b/w). The Outcast. Clayton Moore and Jay Silverheels in more 1940s adventures of the dashing masked rider and his companion, Tonto.
5.30 Noah's Ark: Voyage Into Silence. Spanish ecological series. Tonight's programme travels to Venezuela to explore a huge cave teeming with wildlife, stalactites and stalagmites. (Oracle).
6.00 Elvis: Good Rockin' Tonight. Four Miles. Michael St. Gerard stars in this drama series tracing the life of the king of rock 'n' roll.
6.30 The Cosby Show: Off to the Races. More hilarity in the Huxtable household as obstetrician kid troubles bringing up his streetwise kids (r).

Too formidable: Raymond Williams (9.00pm)

9.00 Raymond Williams - A Journey Of Hope.
● In an otherwise laudatory portrait of the critic, novelist and earnest disseminator of cultural struggle there is one dissenting note. The historian Professor Gwyn Williams says he finds half his namesake's books incomprehensible and his prose "the most dense and clogged I have ever read". The professor defies anyone to read Marxism and Literature without going round the bend. The paradox is that Raymond Williams was deeply interested in communication and now his agencies, particularly the mass media, could better serve the aspirations of working people. His reputation among his own kind, the intellectual left, is secure. Speaker after speaker, from centres of academe stretching across Williams's native Wales and over the border to his adopted Cambridge, pays tribute to his passion and insight. But Karl Francis's film, which also includes dramatised excerpts from Williams's novels, leaves the impression of a sadly unbridgeable gap between a formidable mind and the ordinary souls Williams desperately cared for and wanted to reach. (Oracle).

10.00 Shaky Moments With Julian Clary. Hilarious entertainment for those who love to see others cringe with embarrassment (r).
10.50 Jazz On A Summer's Night: The Jazz Apple. Sax player Joe Temperley concludes his personal survey of the New York jazz scene by turning his attention to the legacy of Duke Ellington.
11.50 State of Six. Rowland Rivin wrings more fifti-fifti laughs out of the Scrooge sextuplets. David, the most creative of the six, is now a newspaper photographer on the Beast on Sea Observer.
12.00am Cycling: The Scottish Provident Pro League Cycling. The nine-man league moves to Birmingham for the penultimate leg. Introduced by Bob Hall.
1.20 Film: The Mysteries of Edgar Wallace (b/w). The Set Up. Ex-convict Arthur Payne is approached by a cunning stranger, who wants to steal his wife's jewellery. Ends at 2.25

RADIO 1

FM Stereo and MW
5.00am Johnnie Walker 6.30 Bruce Springsteen 7.30 Sam Brown 12.30pm News 12.45 Johnnie Walker 1.00pm Steve Wright in the Afternoon 5.30 News 5.40 Johnnie Walker 6.30 The Rolling Stones. Three programmes featuring Nicky Carr's recent conversations with the Rolling Stones, with tracks from their latest album Steel Wheels 8.30 Johnnie Walker 9.00 Richard Smith 10.00 Johnnie Walker 11.00 Johnnie Walker 12.00 Johnnie Walker

RADIO 2

FM Stereo
4.00am Steve Macdonald 5.30 Chris Stewart 7.30 Johnnie Walker 8.30 Johnnie Walker 9.00 Johnnie Walker 10.00 Johnnie Walker 11.00 Johnnie Walker 12.00 Johnnie Walker 1.00pm Johnnie Walker 2.00pm Johnnie Walker 3.00pm Johnnie Walker 4.00pm Johnnie Walker 5.00pm Johnnie Walker 6.00pm Johnnie Walker 7.00pm Johnnie Walker 8.00pm Johnnie Walker 9.00pm Johnnie Walker 10.00pm Johnnie Walker 11.00pm Johnnie Walker 12.00pm Johnnie Walker

WORLD SERVICE

All times in GMT. Add an hour for BST.
5.00am News 5.30 News 5.50 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 News 1.00 News 1.30 News 2.00 News 2.30 News 3.00 News 3.30 News 4.00 News 4.30 News 5.00 News 5.30 News 6.00 News 6.30 News 7.00 News 7.30 News 8.00 News 8.30 News 9.00 News 9.30 News 10.00 News 10.30 News 11.00 News 11.30 News 12.00 News 12.30 <

● BUSINESS AND FINANCE 23-29
● CHARTERED ENGINEERS LIST 29
● LAW 34-35
● SPORT 39-44

Executive Editor
David Brewerton

BUSINESS

TUESDAY JUNE 19 1990

Swedes in talks with Speyhawk

SPEYHAWK, the property developer, has confirmed that it is in talks that may lead to a bid. Its shares jumped 66p to 205p as the market looked for an early bid from Nordjerman, the Swedish construction group, which revealed a 5 per cent stake in the group a fortnight ago. But they slipped back to 195p as it became clear that the talks were at an early stage.

A successful outcome will depend on agreement with Trevor Osborne, Speyhawk's chairman, and 21 per cent shareholder. He was unavailable for comment. Nordjerman is the holding company controlled by Axel Johnson, the Swedish financier. Its interests range from steel and shipping to shops and construction. Its British property subsidiary is NCC Properties, which is being advised in its talks with Speyhawk by SG Warburg.

At the closing price, Speyhawk is valued at only £50 million. But any agreed deal is likely to value the company at considerably more than that.

Wembley sale and leaseback

WEMBLEY, the sports, entertainment and leisure group, has raised £37.5 million through the sale and leaseback of the Wembley conference centre, exhibition hall and office block.

Wembley has a 27-year lease on each building with the option of buying back the freehold interest in the properties at market value in the year 2002. The new owner is Kingstar Estates.

BET ahead 19%

BET, the diversified industrial services group, reported pre-tax profits in the year ended March up 19 per cent to £322.3 million on revenues of £2.69 billion (£2.22 billion). A final dividend of 9p (8p) makes 13p (11.5p).

Temps, page 25

Stake for sale

A controlling 61.6 per cent stake in Henry Ansbacher Holdings, parent company of the London merchant bank, has been put up for sale by Pargesa Holding, Groupe Bruxelles Lambert and Banque Internationale à Luxembourg.

Comment, page 25

Ferranti wins $189m order against Guerin

By ANGELA MACKAY

THE former deputy chairman of Ferranti International was ordered by a High Court judge yesterday to pay $189 million to the two Ferranti subsidiaries he allegedly defrauded.

Mr Justice Hoffmann awarded judgment against James Guerin after he failed to comply with court disclosure orders asking him to give details of the whereabouts of $450 million paid out by the subsidiaries, ISC Technologies and ISC London, to five Panamanian companies as part of an alleged elaborate defence contract fraud.

Mr Guerin, who resigned as deputy chairman in May last year, founded International Signal & Control, an American company Ferranti bought in 1987 for £420 million.

Nine months ago, Ferranti revealed a £215 million hole in its assets purportedly caused by four bogus defence contracts negotiated by Mr Guerin. Since then, the company has sold £350 million of assets to repay banks, changed senior management and initiated several law suits to try to regain the lost money.

The judge said the defence presented by Mr Guerin, who is under criminal investigation in the US, consisted almost entirely of non-admissions and denials and gave no account of what happened. US government officials investigating Mr Guerin's companies said in an American court last month that he had directed a $1 billion defence contract fraud which included the Ferranti fraud.

Part of the plaintiff's evidence in the High Court linked Mr Guerin's private charitable organisation, Parent Foundation, directly to two of the Panamanian companies.

According to Parent Foundation's 1987 tax return, a little more than $955,000 of the $1 million donated to it came from a Swiss company Rovigo Enterprise SA. Rovigo, in turn, received income of more than $1 million from Elverson SA and Navarino Development Corp, two of the five Panamanian companies Ferranti is suing for return of the lost funds.

Herbert Smith, the plaintiff's solicitor, made a similar case related to Parent's 1988 tax return.

Parent disbursed the money in 1987 to several churches in Pennsylvania, including Mr Guerin's family church in Landisville and the Christian County Church in Lititz. It is unlikely Ferranti will try to recover any of this money.

Mr Justice Hoffmann said that he could not accept Mr Guerin's explanation that he did not know what happened to such large sums of money.

He said this conviction was fuelled by Mr Guerin's admission that the Panamanian companies were established, operated and dissolved on his instructions. Asked about the identity of the people who purported to be managing directors of these companies and signed contracts on their behalf, Mr Guerin replied that, to his knowledge, they did not exist.

"If they were not genuine contracts, then the money must have been paid out for some ulterior purpose and if it was, then Mr Guerin must know something about what happened," he said.

Mr Guerin's failure to comply with the court's request "was not the reaction of a litigant genuinely doing his best to comply with an order, but was a perfunctory answer fairly described as illusory, or even contemptuous," Mr Justice Hoffmann said.

Ferranti is expected to come to court soon in other actions against three former ISC employees allegedly involved in the fraud. They are Robert Shireman, ISC's former finance director, Lawrence Resch, a former marketing executive, and Wayne Radcliffe, who was once a vice-president of ISC.

Loss of order forces up to 550 job cuts

By KERRY GILL

GEC Ferranti announced that up to 550 jobs are to be shed at its Scottish plants. The decision was taken after the loss of an important overseas contract and the increased competition in the defence market place.

A spokesman for the company, which currently employs about 6,000 people in Edinburgh on the design and manufacture of defence systems, said: "Consultation with employees and their representatives has begun and every effort will be made to assist those affected to find alternative employment in the locality."

The lost overseas order is believed to have involved an aircraft laser system for a US-based consortium.

The jobs will go at plants in Edinburgh and Bellshill, Lanarkshire. All levels of staff, from management to production and administration, will be affected. The spokesman said that efforts would be made to relocate those affected, but admitted that it was unlikely many staff could be found alternative employment.

The redundancy programme is likely to begin in September and last until next March, the spokesman added.

Sketchley chief leaves after 'nightmare year'

By OUR CITY STAFF

THE chairman of Sketchley, the dry cleaning, vending and industrial clothing group, stepped down yesterday as the company reported a £2 million pre-tax loss, cancelled the final dividend and unveiled a three-for-five share rights issue to raise £20.6 million.

John Gillum, chairman since March 8, said 1989-90 had been a "nightmare year" for the company. Its results have been disastrous and its credibility shaken.

In 1988-89 the group reported a pre-tax profit of £16 million and profits attributable to shareholders were £11.5 million. This compares with an attributable loss of £8 million announced yesterday after a further £5.6 million of extraordinary losses were included below the line.

"We [Mr Gillum and his fellow non-executive director Jerry Shiveley] recognise that we cannot altogether disassociate ourselves from the thoroughly unsatisfactory performance of the company," he said.

Mr Shiveley will not stand for re-election at the annual meeting on August 15 and Mr Gillum will step down at the same time. Sketchley shares dropped to a low of 162p before closing 20p lower at 183p.

The 100p-a-share rights issue is underwritten by the group's new merchant banking adviser, Samuel Montagu, and the company's major shareholders, including M&G, Britannic Assurance and Mercury Asset Management, have indicated they will take up their entitlement.

New management was installed at Sketchley in April after the group avoided two takeover bids. At the time of the bids, the company forecast a pre-tax profit of at least £6 million.

However, the market was given a warning last month that this might not be achieved.

John Richardson and Tony Bloom, the new deputy chairman, retained Ernst & Young, the accounting firm, to prepare a report into the group and, as a result, have adopted more stringent accounting controls, which included a £3.3 million write-off of bad and doubtful debts and a £2.7 million provision related to stock re-evaluation.

The main change in accounting policy concerns the treatment of leased assets in the vending business. Vending lost £1.3 million, dry cleaning profits dropped by £1.6 million to £4.4 million, office services slumped from almost £3 million to £111,000 and textile services' contribution eased from £4.4 million to £3.7 million.

Despite the announcement, Sketchley's new management were confident that most of the necessary provisions had been made.

They are half-way through a cost-cutting programme which has included sacking about 50 people and a further 150 are expected to be made redundant this year.

given a warning last month that this might not be achieved.

John Richardson and Tony Bloom, the new deputy chairman, retained Ernst & Young, the accounting firm, to prepare a report into the group and, as a result, have adopted more stringent accounting controls, which included a £3.3 million write-off of bad and doubtful debts and a £2.7 million provision related to stock re-evaluation.

The main change in accounting policy concerns the treatment of leased assets in the vending business. Vending lost £1.3 million, dry cleaning profits dropped by £1.6 million to £4.4 million, office services slumped from almost £3 million to £111,000 and textile services' contribution eased from £4.4 million to £3.7 million.

Despite the announcement, Sketchley's new management were confident that most of the necessary provisions had been made.

They are half-way through a cost-cutting programme which has included sacking about 50 people and a further 150 are expected to be made redundant this year.

Egan on starting grid for BAA

By MARTIN WALLER

Sir John Egan applauds a triumphant John Nielsen, one of the team that drove Jaguar to victory in the weekend's Le Mans 24-hour race with the XJ4-12 model

SIR John Egan, who retires as chairman of Jaguar at the end of this month after being largely responsible for the car maker's resurgence in the 1980s, is to be the new chief executive of BAA, the former British Airports Authority.

He joins a group whose assets have virtually quadrupled in value since its privatisation in summer 1987, according to the latest property revaluation, released yesterday with another strong set of annual figures.

BAA raised pre-tax profits from £198 million to £256 million in the year to end-March, slightly exceeding City expectations. The shares, on a dull day for the stock market, jumped 7p to 423p.

A final dividend of 7p makes 11.5p, up from 9p. The company took a £76 million below-the-line profit from a deferred tax release.

BAA has been seeking a new chief executive since the departure, after a boardroom dispute, of Jeremy Marshall last August. Sir Norman Payne, the chairman, who will be 69 this autumn, has combined the two roles since then. No details on annual salary were given, but Sir John can expect a good advance on the £217,000 noted in Jaguar's latest accounts. A reported figure of £350,000 would put him on twice the pay of his predecessor.

The completion of a three-year property review at BAA by the chartered surveyor, Drivers Jonas, resulted in a valuation of 765p a share. Total property assets, including those of the Lynton property company bought in 1988, were put at about £3.8 billion, but this did not include works under construction, for example at Stansted Airport.

Operating assets were therefore valued at about £4.5 billion, said Sir Norman. BAA was floated at upwards of £1.225 billion.

Sir Norman denied that the revaluation was connected with BAA's 9 per cent hostile shareholder, ADT. Michael Ashcroft's security and vehicle auction group. "We've had no talks with Mr Ashcroft in the last six months," he said.

Sir John would be a "hands-on" manager involved in the day-to-day running, while Sir Norman would be involved with long-term policy.

Sir John, who is 50, was not the automatic choice to take over the BAA chair, said Sir Norman. "There's no decision about the future chairman-ship," he said.

Analysts are looking for pre-tax profits of £285 million in BAA's current year. BAA will decide this autumn whether to seek planning consent for a fifth terminal at Heathrow.

Comment, page 25

Wage costs show gain of 8.1%

By RODNEY LORD
ECONOMICS EDITOR

BRITISH manufacturers' unit wage costs continued to grow rapidly, showing a gain of 8.1 per cent in the three months to April compared with the same period a year earlier. The pound eased on the figures, which were released at the same time as figures showing the public sector strongly in deficit for the second month of the financial year.

Industrial production rose about half a percentage point in April after seasonal adjustment and within that, manufacturing output was little changed. The slow growth in output contributed to a slow rise in productivity, which in the three months to April was only 1.1 per cent up on the same period a year earlier. This combined with high earnings growth to keep the rise in unit wage costs high.

The Central Statistical Office said that energy production had continued to recover. Manufacturing output was revised up in March to show a 2 per cent rise. In the three months to April it was 1 per cent higher than in the previous three months and ½ per cent higher than a year earlier. The CSO said underlying growth in recent months was around 1½ per cent a year.

Jon Shields, of Mitsubishi Bank, said: "The implications of the unit wage costs are fairly gloomy. This confirms industry's continuing cost pressures." Sterling closed down 0.2 on the effective rate index at 90.4, partly reflecting a strengthening of the mark against the dollar.

The public sector borrowing requirement was provisionally estimated to have been £1.7 billion in May, bringing the total for the first two months of the financial year to £3.8 billion compared with a repayment of £700 million in the same period last year. Of the £4.5 billion difference, £1.8 billion represented privatisation proceeds last year and much of the rest was due to delays in payment of the poll tax.

Rayner's pay rises 46% to £620,000

By GILLIAN BOWDITCH

LORD Rayner, chairman of Marks and Spencer, received a 46 per cent pay rise last year, taking his salary from £424,401 to £619,961.

The group recently awarded sales staff a pay rise of 26 per cent over three years, putting them among the highest paid sales assistants in the country with an average salary of £150 a week.

A spokesman for the group said Lord Rayner's salary was set by the compensation committee, which is largely made up of non-executive directors. In setting salary levels the committee takes into account the group's performance, the contributions of individual directors, market forces and salary levels outside the group.

The spokesman said awarding the chairman this level of salary allowed management below him to be paid at competitive rates. Total directors' emoluments, including pension contributions, increased from £2.8 million to £4.2 million. Lord Rayner has shares worth £250,000 and options worth £2.7 million.

M&S recently pleased the City with pre-tax profits up 14 per cent at £604 million on sales up 9.5 per cent at £5.61 billion. Lord Rayner says the group will expand into new areas of merchandise and will continue its programme of new store openings. Initial results from the first Spanish store are encouraging and the first store in Amsterdam will open in 1991. Japan has been earmarked for further expansion.

The company donated £3,288,000 to charities last year and made a political contribution of £25,000 to British United Industrialists.

Introducing an irresistible 13.75% mortgage.
(As you'll see from the prose, there aren't any cons.)

(14.7%)
Typical APR

At times like these, fixed-rate mortgages look very attractive. Whether you're moving or remortgaging, they offer you lower repayments — and protection against any more nasty surprises. But with many of them, there's a problem. A lot of people believe that interest rates will start to fall next year as the general election approaches: and there are few things more frustrating than being locked into a fixed-rate mortgage while interest rates are tumbling.

That's why our new fixed-rate mortgage — which offers an exceptionally competitive rate of 13.75% (14.7% APR) — is only fixed until June 1st 1991.

On that date, you get a choice. If interest rates are indeed tumbling, you can switch into a variable rate. If they aren't, you can choose a new fixed rate, in line with the market. And if the market trend still isn't clear, you can even choose a hybrid which is partly fixed and partly variable. All without any redemption penalties.

In short, it's a mortgage which looks better and better the more you look into it.

For written details, call John Charcol, a licensed credit broker, on (071) 589 7080. Or write to us at Mercury House, 195 Knightsbridge, London SW7 1RE.

JOHN CHARCOL

Talk about a better mortgage.
071-589-7080

The product advertised here is not regulated by the Financial Services Act 1986 and the rules made for the protection of investors by that Act will not apply to it. Credit broker fees may be charged depending on the type of product and under period, and insurance may also be required. Your home is at risk if you do not keep up repayments on a mortgage or other loan secured on it.

THE POUND

US dollar 1.7125 (+0.0075)
W German mark 2.8693 (-0.0249)
Exchange index 90.4 (-0.2)

STOCK MARKET

FT 30 Share 1911.9 (-14.0)
FT-SE 100 2370.5 (-21.8)
New York Dow Jones 2898.52 (-37.38)
Closing Prices ... Page 27

Major indices and major changes

Page 24

INTEREST RATES

London: Bank Base: 15%
3-month Interbank 14½-14¾%
3-month eligible bills 14½-14¾%
US: Prime Rate 10%
Federal Funds 8½%
3-month Treasury Bills 7.68-7.69%
30-year bonds 103½-103¾

CURRENCIES

London: New York: £: $1.7125
D: $1.7125
S: DM 1.6758
S: Sfr 1.4185
S: FF 6.6385
S: Yen 153.72
S: Index 57.6
ECU 1.714887 SDR 1.788971
ECU 1.399213 SDR 1.300439

GOLD

London Fixing: AM $349.00 pm $349.25
Close $349.00-349.50 (2204.00-204.50)
New York: Comex $349.50-350.00

NORTH SEA OIL

Brant (Aug) ... $16.00 bbl ($16.30)
* Denotes latest trading price

TOURIST RATES

Bank	Buy	Sell
Australia	2.33	2.17
Austria	21.70	20.80
Belgium	20.75	19.85
Denmark	11.47	10.77
Finland	10.10	9.50
France	3.00	2.82
Germany	16.83	15.09
Greece	11.25	10.65
Hong Kong	22.10	20.80
Italy	11.57	10.87
Japan	11.57	10.87
Netherlands	20.50	19.80
Norway	5.70	5.10
Portugal	104.75	102.75
Spain	10.53	10.23
Sweden	2.55	2.35
Switzerland	47.00	45.00
Turkey	1.79	1.69
USA	24.25	23.25
Yugoslavia	16.25	15.25

Rates for small denomination bank notes only as supplied by Barclay Bank PLC. Different rates apply to travellers' cheques.
Retail Price Index: 126.2 (May)

CU holds 12.6% of Anglia Homes

By MATTHEW BOND

COMMERCIAL Union has emerged as the second biggest shareholder in Anglia Secure Homes, the sheltered housing group, following a lukewarm reception from shareholders for the rights issue.

By the time the £7.7 million issue closed, shareholders had subscribed for just 27 per cent of the 11 million new shares available under the one-for-two issue.

Anglia's biggest shareholder remains British & Commonwealth, the financial services group now being run by administrators. Despite not taking up its rights, B&C still has a stake of more than 14 per cent.

The issue was fully underwritten by Lazard Brothers, with CU sub-underwriting 30 per cent as part of a complex restructuring package announced in April.

As part of that package, CU spent £950,000 on a 5 per cent stake in Anglia and a further £1.1 million on a 49 per cent stake in Haven Services, Anglia's services subsidiary.

Following the rights issue, CU now has a 12.6 per cent stake, a little short of the 14.1 per cent it could have ended up with under the sub-underwriting arrangements.

With the rights money in place, Peter Edmondson, Anglia's chairman, is now more concerned with the fate of B&C's stake.

The expectation that the stake will be sold at a discount by the administrators is the main reason why Anglia's share price, at 60p, is below the rights price.

Mr Edmondson said: "There can't be many company chairmen who have had their major shareholder go into administration during a rights period. I suppose the market realises that the shares have to be sold in the short term."

Mr Edmondson would prefer to see the shares placed with a range of institutions, but, as yet, has had no meetings with Ernst & Young, B&C's administrator.

Despite the rights issue, Anglia's gearing remains more than 100 per cent, but, says Mr Edmondson, this will fall following a rationalisation programme.

Trump threatens bankruptcy suit as refuge from creditors

From JOHN DUNN IN NEW YORK

DONALD Trump, the embattled New York property developer, has threatened to file for bankruptcy as part of his negotiations with leading creditors, aimed at maintaining his multi-billion dollar property empire.

The talks with bankers continued over the weekend with little sign of progress yesterday after Mr Trump missed payment of $73 million last Friday.

Payments missed include $30 million to the bank Manufacturers Hanover and $43 million in payments on his Trump Castle casino bonds.

The casino bonds have now entered a ten-day default period in which Mr Trump has time to pay the money to avoid facing winding-up proceedings by any creditor.

Shares in National Westminster Bank fell 9p to 334p on news that it is exposed to Mr Trump through its New York subsidiary, a NatWest spokesman said that in line with its policy of not disclosing client details, the bank would not discuss the size of the exposure.

Michael Lever, a banking analyst at the broker Smith New Court, said: "Press comment has put NatWest's exposure in the $50 million to $100 million range. It is probably at the upper end of that range and possibly a little higher."

"If the loans were non-performing the bank would treat it as a provision in its Trump: birthday party accounts at the half-year stage. We shall see. Meanwhile, one has to be somewhat concerned about the exposure. No other UK bank seems to be involved to a significant degree." The Wall Street Journal said yesterday that Mr Trump had personally guaranteed $500 million of his $2 billion of bank loans in recent years.

Most property developers shun personal guarantees, but Mr Trump, while New York's most celebrated property developer, made guarantees on the $135 million loan to buy the loss-making Trump airline shuttle among other loans.

His major bankers, including Citicorp, are still attempting to convince other banks in their syndicates to advance Mr Trump $60 million to ease his present cash shortage.

With borrowings of more than $3.1 billion and yearly interest payments of over $160 million, Mr Trump faces the dual problems of a decline in the market value of his assets and a cash shortfall in revenue from these assets.

The loan would give him time to sell some assets while meeting interest payments, but this is more protection for the banks than for Mr Trump.

This is why Mr Trump has used the threat of a bankruptcy filing, which would give him at least three months' protection from creditors.

The banks, meanwhile, are pressing Mr Trump to appoint new executives in charge of his organisation and to reduce his day-to-day control.

Mr Trump's casino employees held a party for his 44th birthday at the weekend. He told them: "Over the years I've surprised a lot of people, the largest surprise is yet to come."

Severn Trent beats forecast

By GRAHAM SEARJEANT FINANCIAL EDITOR

JOHN Bellak, chairman of Severn Trent, had the good news for shareholders that the landlocked water service group had beaten its prospectus profit forecast by £8.9 million with pre-tax profits of £130 million.

Capital spending was marginally below forecast at £262 million, mainly because the costs of refining mains had been less than budgeted.

Mr Bellak said the group would complete its ten-year capital spending programme of £4 billion at 1989 prices "on time and at or below budget".

If the capital restructuring at privatisation had been in place for the full year, pro forma profits would have been £217 million against the prospectus forecast of £208 million and earnings per share 56.4p against a forecast 53.7p. As forecast, the final dividend is 9.9p per share.

The group does not expect to have to ask for extra costs to be passed through to customers in the first five years. Mr Bellak said that extra European Community standards imposed or proposed since privatisation should affect Severn Trent less than any other British water service group.

Severn Trent has not dumped sludge at sea since 1974 and hopes to sell its expertise to other groups.

John Bellak: with news of £130m profit yesterday

London listing to help brewer Kirin expand in Europe

By DEREK HARRIS, INDUSTRIAL EDITOR

KIRIN, Japan's biggest brewer and number four in the world, sees the start of dealings in its shares on the London stock market today as a move towards expansion in Europe.

Growth through acquisition is an option. Kirin is watching for opportunities to buy breweries in the United Kingdom as brewers face changes in the wake of the recent Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigation.

Ryo Ueda, Kirin's managing director, is in London for the listing. The company will be quoted in Paris at the end of next week.

Kirin was keen to enhance its image with the international financial community because it saw Europe as a good source of extra funding when needed, said Mr Ueda. The company had surplus funds of Yen400 billion (£1.5 billion).

Kirin was looking "with extreme interest" at the European beer market, said Mr Ueda. Beer accounts for 87 per cent of Kirin's business although it is Japan's second largest soft drinks producer. It is also branching out in pharmaceuticals.

Kirin believes that Europe is one of three key areas where a world player in beer needs a strong presence, the others being the Far East, including Japan, and North America. Kirin has geared up production in the Far East with a licensing agreement for production of its beers in Hong Kong while in North America, Molson of Canada, brews Kirin beers under licence for sale in America.

Licensing was an option for European expansion, said Mr Ueda. Although Kirin has an association with Heineken of the Netherlands, for which it brews beer in Japan under licence, there was "no particular relationship" with the Dutch brewers as far as European markets were concerned.

There has been speculation that Heineken might buy brewing capacity in the UK and a link with Kirin might then be logical.

Kirin's upward trend in Japan, where it has about half the market, was halted recently when Asahi, the country's second largest brewer, introduced the so-called "dry" beer. Kirin believes the tables are now turned with the introduction of another new-style beer, Ichiban Shiroi, which in its first few months has grown faster than dry beer did at its start.

BUSINESS ROUNDUP

Some acceptances of TT bid withdrawn

TT GROUP, which is in a three-way fight for Crystalate, a fellow electronic components group, has extended its £31 million offer until the Friday after next and announced the withdrawal of some acceptances after the rival bid from Vishay Intertechnology, an American group. As well as its stake of 10 per cent in Crystalate, TT has acceptances for another 2.74 per cent, although this is a reduction from the 3.39 per cent at the start of this month.

John Newman, a director of TT, said there had been a "two-way trade" with some new acceptances since the Vishay offer. The Americans are offering 80p in cash, against about 85p in cash-and-shares from TT. Crystalate's shares were unchanged at 82p on the news.

Syltone rises to £2.4m

SYLTONE, the transport services group, reported pre-tax profits up from £2.09 million to £2.41 million on a turnover of £32.6 million (£29.7 million). A final 6p (4.75p) dividend makes 8p (6.75p) for the year. The group says the British truck market is likely to remain depressed, though its spread of interest should lead to another successful year.

Rise to £2m for Hadleigh

HADLEIGH Industries, the USM-quoted vehicle trailer and engineering group, produced results in line with expectations in its first full year as a public company. Pre-tax profits for the year to March were £2.04 million, up from £993,000. Sales were £25.6 million (£19 million) and EPS rose from 11.7p to 20.7p. A final dividend of 4p makes 6p for the year.

Polar's first dividend

POLAR Electronics, the distributor of electronic components floated on the USM last year, increased taxable profits by 13 per cent from £333,000 to £501,000 during the six months to the end of March.

The company is paying a maiden interim dividend of 2p a share. Earnings per share slipped back from 5.6p to 4.9p, reflecting the issue of equity to finance the acquisition in May of part of Hawk Components, formerly an operating division of Lex Electronics. Turnover fell from £7.01 million to £6.76 million.

Trealt falls to £502,000

TREATT, the USM-quoted blender and distiller of aromatic chemicals for food, soft drinks and soaps, suffered a 36 per cent fall in taxable profits from £774,000 to £502,000 during the six months to the end of March. The interim dividend is held at 1p a share. Turnover slipped from £6.2 million to £5.32 million.

Standard to sell subsidiary

STANDARD Chartered Bank Australia has agreed to sell Standard Chartered Finance, its wholly-owned financial services subsidiary, to Australian Guarantee, a unit of Westpac Banking. Westpac will pay $55 million (£26 million). The final consideration may be adjusted after completion of the accounts.

Hawtin level midway

HAWTIN, the distribution and sports goods company, reports taxable profits almost unchanged at £543,000 (£540,000) for the six months to the end of March. Turnover fell from £600,000 to £598,000 but operating profits advanced 26 per cent to £915,000, helped by £371,000 from the enlarged manufacturing and marketing activities, against £9,000. But interest charges doubled to £382,000.

The distribution division increased profits by almost 40 per cent to £437,000. The company does not pay interim dividends.

WORLD MARKET INDICES

Index	Value	Daily chg (%)	Yearly chg (%)	Daily chg (%)	Yearly chg (%)	Daily chg (%)	Yearly chg (%)
The World	727.0	-0.5	-13.8	-0.3	-7.0	-0.2	-8.7
(free)	138.8	-0.5	-14.0	-0.4	-7.2	-0.2	-8.8
EAPE	1267.2	-0.4	-18.7	-0.5	-11.7	-0.1	-13.8
(free)	129.9	-0.4	-19.0	-0.6	-12.0	-0.1	-14.2
Europe	738.7	-0.2	-2.9	-0.4	-0.8	0.2	2.8
(free)	158.7	-0.2	-2.9	-0.7	-0.9	0.2	2.8
North America	516.8	-0.7	-4.0	0.4	1.9	-0.4	1.6
Nordic	1558.7	0.3	0.1	0.0	0.2	0.6	6.1
(free)	248.3	0.3	5.8	0.0	9.6	0.6	11.8
Pacific	2874.4	-0.6	-27.5	-0.6	-18.2	-0.3	-23.2
Far East	1462.7	-0.6	-28.1	-0.6	-18.7	-0.3	-23.8
Australia	301.7	-0.4	-13.1	0.2	-6.7	0.7	-8.0
Austria	1474.4	-0.3	17.6	-0.5	24.2	0.1	24.5
Belgium	885.2	-0.4	-10.1	0.0	-7.2	0.7	-4.7
Canada	507.6	-1.0	-15.5	-0.7	-9.4	-0.7	-10.4
Denmark	1340.2	0.6	1.8	0.0	5.1	0.9	7.9
Finland	94.7	0.8	-17.8	0.7	-14.5	1.1	-13.0
(free)	138.8	1.7	-6.9	1.6	-3.1	2.0	-1.4
France	763.4	-0.5	-5.2	-1.0	-1.4	-0.2	-2.8
Germany	2025.5	1.2	-4.0	-0.7	1.4	1.5	1.7
Hong Kong	2382.1	-0.3	7.4	0.0	13.5	0.0	13.8
Italy	394.6	0.7	2.4	0.2	5.9	1.0	8.6
Japan	4374.2	-0.7	-29.1	-0.7	-19.6	-0.4	-24.9
Netherlands	853.0	-0.3	-9.8	-0.8	-4.9	0.0	-4.4
New Zealand	88.5	0.1	-14.2	0.4	-7.1	0.4	-9.0
Norway	1487.8	-0.9	10.8	-1.2	15.3	-0.6	17.4
(free)	257.7	-0.9	10.3	-1.2	14.7	-0.6	16.9
Singapore	1956.5	0.5	-1.9	0.7	1.1	0.8	3.9
Spain	215.2	0.4	-9.1	0.0	-8.3	0.7	-3.7
Sweden	1763.4	0.5	0.5	0.3	4.8	0.8	6.5
(free)	261.7	0.6	8.1	0.4	12.7	0.9	14.8
Switzerland	838.4	-0.3	2.7	-0.8	1.0	0.0	8.5
(free)	141.8	-0.3	1.9	-0.7	0.1	7.6	7.6
UK	705.3	-0.9	-2.2	-0.9	-2.2	-0.6	3.8
USA	469.0	-0.7	-2.9	-0.3	2.8	-0.3	2.8

(90) Local currency.

Source: Morgan Stanley Capital International.

Board reshuffle at Reject Shop

By GILLIAN BOWDITCH

REJECT Shop, the furniture and giftware retailer, which saw profits halve in the year to March, is reshuffling its board.

The group's founders, Anna Vinton and Anthony Hawser, currently joint managing directors, are to become joint chairmen. Geoffrey Frost, assistant managing director, becomes managing director.

Mr John Beer, who joined the group from Habitat as financial accountant, is appointed finance director. Mr Jack Aaronson, non-executive chairman, is retiring. Two new non-executive directors will be recruited.

The group made pre-tax profits of £743,000 (£146 million) for the year. Sales were £17.4 million (£16.3 million).

and EPS fell from 9.15p to 4.58p. The final dividend is 2p, making 3.15p for the year, the same as last time.

The group is considering launching a chain of smaller, giftware only shops under a different name.

The shares on the USM rose 2p to 40p.

Tempus, page 25

Renold profits up by 31% to £9.5m

By MARTIN BARROW

RENOLD, the chain and gear manufacturer, announced pre-tax profits up almost 31 per cent to £9.5 million for the 12 months to the end of March.

Taxable profits included a £300,000 net exceptional credit arising from the disposal of surplus property worth £4.3 million, taken against restructuring costs of £4 million.

Earnings per share, excluding the exceptional credit, rose by 29 per cent from 8.2p to 10.6p. A final dividend of 2.5p a share takes the total to 13.1p, up 32 per cent from 2.8p last time.

Reported turnover was just two per cent up at £148 million (£145.4 million). But last year's comparable figures included a full-year contribution from Manesty Machines, the pharmaceutical equipment business, which was sold in February, netting an extraordinary credit of £2.3 million.

Proceeds of the disposal have left Manchester-based Renold with borrowings of just £200,000 and helped reduce the annual interest charge from £2.5 million to £1 million.

Borrowings have been kept low despite capital expenditure of £9.2 million for the year, reflecting the cost of investment in high-speed production equipment at a new factory in Stockport.

Hewetson 21% ahead at £2.2m

By OUR CITY STAFF

PRE-TAX profits at Hewetson, the USM-quoted raised floor and windows group, rose by 21 per cent to £2.2 million in the year to March.

Peter Price, chairman, said that two of the group's three divisions did very well last year, but the slump in private housebuilding had hit the window division's profitability. Its contribution to pre-tax profit fell from £544,000 in 1989 to £120,000 in 1990.

Pre-tax profits from the raised floor division rose by 66 per cent to £1.13 million. The carpets division made pre-tax profits of £954,000, up 60 per cent.

A final dividend of 2.9p (2.6p) is being paid, making a total of 4.5p (3.85p).

Manchester Business School

DEVELOPMENT FOR YOUR HIGH FLYERS WITHOUT LEAVING THE NEST

The Master in Business Management (MBM) degree offers a unique opportunity to companies who recognise the investment potential in training their best people.

The programme is designed to help you improve your company's performance through enhancing the management ability of your best managers and ensure their continuing commitment to your organisation.

At the same time, a flexible partnership with MBS helps you retain involvement, ensure close linkage with your prevailing business circumstances and complement your in-house training.

The MBM's unique design combines part-time attendance at MBS, in-company projects and high quality participation of companies like Barclays Bank, British Gas, Ciba Geigy, Ferranti, Godfrey Davis, IBM, ICL, Pilkington, Shell, Spicer & Oppenheim and Thomtons.

The MBM is only available to company nominated executives. Candidates must have appropriate experience and pass a demanding entrance examination.

For further information about the programme and receptions in London and Manchester, contact Caroline Ball, Manchester Business School, Booth Street West, Manchester M15 6PB. Tel: 061 275 6498. Fax: 061 273 7732. Telex: 668354.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER

Glynwed's bid not yet lapsed

By OUR INDUSTRIAL EDITOR

GLYNWED International, whose £34 million recommended bid for Alumatic, the beer keg maker, was referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission last week, said that the bid had not yet lapsed.

Normally a reference means that a bid automatically lapses during the enquiry. Due to a "legalistic quirk" in part of the offer conditions, the Glynwed bid would not lapse until June 28, said Christopher Purser, Glynwed's treasurer.

The takeover panel requested the announcement which said that the offer, of one-for-one share swap with a 22.5p-a-share cash alternative, had not yet become unconditional in all respects. Mr Purser said: "We are considering a number of options but it is too early to say what looks likely."

If Glynwed reduced the share of the metal rainwater goods market, which the merger would create, it is possible the Office of Fair Trading and the Department of Trade and Industry could re-assess the reference.

MAJOR INDICES

New York: Dow Jones 2896.52 (-37.38)
 Tokyo: Nikkei Average 32376.80 (-161.60)
 CBOE Tendency 119.1 (-0.9)
 Sydney AD 1506 (+3.3)
 Frankfurt DAX 1797.42 (+5.16)

Brussels: General 6279.42 (-5.31)
 Paris CAC 5428.81 (-0.61)
 Zurich: S&P Gen 656.2 (-3.6)
 London: FT-A All Share 1169.29 (-9.10)
 FT-300 1265.83 (-9.53)
 FT Gold Mines 170.7 (+2.8)
 FT Fixed Interest 86.48 (+0.22)
 FT Govt Secs 79.47 (-0.29)
 Barings 243.14
 SEAO Volume 403.4m
 USM (Datastream) 137.41 (+0.52)
 *Denotes latest trading price

MAJOR CHANGES

RISES:
 Nu-Swift 477 1/2p (+15p)
 Ashland Mid 125 1/2p (+3p)
 Evans Oil Leads 262 1/2p (+15p)
 ECC Group 400p (+10p)
 C & W Flexflo 110 1/2p (+13p)
 Jones Stroud 225p (+10p)
 Speybank 155p (+5p)
 News Corp 520p (+7p)

FALLS:
 RSC 349 1/2p (-10p)
 Phoenix 735p (-10p)
 Pirelli Marans 202 1/2p (-12p)
 Henderson Adm 85p (-15p)
 Pearson 78 1/2p (-3p)
 Logica 188p (-10p)
 Davy 250p (-14p)
 MAM 52p (-10p)
 Wills Faber 25 1/2p (-10p)
 Anglo Group 152 1/2p (-10p)
 BAT 648 1/2p (-14p)
 Closing prices

TRADITIONAL OPTIONS

First Dealings June 18
 Last Dealings June 29
 Last Declaration September 20
 For Settlement October 1
 Call options were bought on: 18/06/90 Aviva, Bala Resources, Eldridge Pope, Glynwed Resources, Harle, Monmouth Oil & Gas, Telford, Pet & Calt, Aviva.

ALPHA STOCKS

Vol '000	Vol '000	Vol '000	Vol '000
ADT 239	CU 971	Lombard 1,480	Shell 391
Abbey Nat 2,330	Coors 283	Lucas 1,218	Shibui 511
Am-Lyons 914	Coultas 406	Moultrey 324	SK Bond 577
Amstar 209	Dalgety 148	M&S 1,227	Smith & N 779
Arad 382	Dixons 8,577	McConnell Cm 1,192	SK Bond 577
ASDA 1,753	ECC 1,005	Mid Group 902
ASDA 3,102	Enterprise 397	MECCA 470
Asda Stores 1,565	Esso 1,000	M&S 1,227
B&B 2,217	F&C 343	Nat West 3,658
B&B 5,772	Food Acc 5,772	4,513
B&B 2,514	GAC 2,768	Nat West 3,658
B&B 1,184	Gleno 893	P&G 509
B&B 1,851	Globe Int 1,851	P&G 509
B&B 2,344	Gwynedd 1,230	Pilkington 700
B&B 1,021	Guinness 603	Polly Peak 2,025
B&B 580	H&M 580	2,025
B&B 1,062	Do Wits 1,185	Reed 829
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,819
B&B 2,613	Hawtrey 417	RTZ 1,81

Ansbacher goes onto the block

COMMENT

DAVID BREWERTON

Another ripple from the collapse of Drexel Burnham Lambert has reached the shore. Henry Ansbacher, a small but well-formed merchant bank, is up for sale. Officially, the majority shareholding group, Pargesa Holding, Groupe Bruxelles Lambert and Banque Internationale à Luxembourg, have taken the decision to sell their 61.6 per cent stake following "a general strategic review" of their investments. Unofficially, Pargesa has been wracked by disputes and the group has taken an £80 million hit on the Drexel collapse. It needs comfort.

Ansbacher is likely to end up in more suitable hands than those of the warring Belgians. Pargesa needs to buy and sell investments in order to keep the dividend flow going, and the position of Gerard Eskrenazi as the chairman depends on not letting down his powerful and vociferous shareholders.

Finding a buyer for Ansbacher should not be difficult. Banque Indo-Suez, purchaser of the Garimore fund management operations but a disappointed suitor for Morgan Grenfell, has already looked Ansbacher over once this year, and is likely to come back for a second viewing. Others in the frame include banks in Germany, France, Italy and this year's most enthusiastic buyers of British assets, the Scandinavians. Ansbacher can count among its most influential shareholders Robert Maxwell and the Kuwait government, but neither can be counted as likely buyers of control.

Under Richard Fenhalls, the chief executive who successfully distanced the bank from the Guinness affair, Ansbacher has been tidied up and is now an over-capitalised but profitable niche player in specialist lending, especially bridging for corporate transactions, corporate finance for small to medium-sized companies and third world debt trading. It needs a parent which can put business its way, and a continental bank would do nicely. As a stand-alone company, it might take a long time to grow into its asset base. Its risk-to-asset ratio is half as high again as it needs be.

Change in ownership of the controlling block of shares would trigger an automatic bid for Ansbacher, a point which was largely lost on the share price after the news. This may be because Ansbacher is already traded on a rating which would have the clearing bankers weeping into their claret. At 78p, Ansbacher is selling at more than 22 times earnings, small being beautiful. Net assets, mostly in a form which can be counted and stored in the vaults, are nevertheless a healthy 55p a share. Stripping out the excess could bring the price/earnings ratio down to the mid-teens, which is hardly a heady premium for a continental to pay to gain a foothold in London's most exclusive financial club. His face would have to fit, however, with the Bank of England.

Horse trader

There is a pleasing irony about the appointment of Sir John Egan as chief executive at BAA. This is the man who saw Jaguar shot out from under him despite the protection of a "golden share". BAA is relying on its own special share for protection against Michael Ashcroft. But Nicholas Ridley, up before the trade and industry committee in December, made a fair distinction between the Jaguar tie, which was heading for its sell-by date, and the so-called "timeless" share at BAA. Sir John brings from Jaguar experience of the political horse-trading needed by a chairman of a company still with a foot in the public sector. Such experience will at least be useful in the forthcoming Monopolies and Mergers Commission review into BAA's pricing policies.

It will also be needed if Mr Ashcroft, who is showing signs of wanting to shake off his self-imposed fringe status, lobbies for a break-up for BAA, having off its property, hotel and other commercial interests from the airports themselves.

A combination of Sir John, the property revaluation and some excellent full-year figures yesterday saw some of the bears in the market, who had been talking BAA down from its 429p all-time Better late...

Having sunk £50 million into Bryant Group when housebuilding was flourishing, ECC is pulling out with the industry flat on its back. While ECC is delighted to escape with its investment more or less intact, shareholders may question the wisdom of selling at close to the bottom.

The decision is evidence of the changes taking place at ECC. Andrew Teare does not officially slip into the chief executive's seat until July 1, but his hand can be detected in both the Bryant sale and the £310 million bid for Georgia Kaolin. Diversification is scrapped in favour of specialisation, and the group will build its future on the minerals extraction activities that shaped its past.

The decision to sell Bryant might have been better taken a year ago, or two years hence. But at least it has been taken.

Neddy wins a new lease of life under John Major

THE National Economic Development Council, the round table forum that brings together industry, the trade unions and government, is sensing a renaissance under John Major's chancellorship.

The government has not abandoned its fundamental suspicions of this corporatist-looking creation of the Macmillan years. But Mr Major has a calmer and more tolerant style than his predecessor, Nigel Lawson. And with the economy hitting a rocky patch, and the government trailing in the polls, listening to others' views at the NEDC might even be valuable.

Another explanation for the NEDC's return to favour probably lies in the changes forced on it by Mr Lawson's savaging of its budget and halving of its staff in 1987. Walter Eltis, an Oxford academic, bravely took over as director general of the National Economic Development Office, the NEDC's administrative body, the year after. Under his careful guidance, "Neddy" has been given a distinct supply-side focus that has appeal to the most Thatcherite members of the cabinet. As long as it stays clear of industrial policy, as such, Mr Eltis's baby appears to be an acceptable meeting point. As he says, there is more than enough work to do in seeking ways of ridding British industry from its inefficiencies.

Mr Eltis is quick to deny that his various sectoral committees are just talk shops. Some 60 to 70 chief executives from the private sector are active participants. Attention of committee and working groups has been concentrated on issues related to the balance of payments. At the other end of the scale, NEDC is no longer content simply to identify problems. It now offers concrete advice to companies too, albeit on a limited scale.

For the first time, NEDC yesterday unveiled in advance the major projects to which it will give top priority over the next 12 months. They range from work on the underlying cause of the £2.5 billion trade deficit on tourism to the impact of tougher environmental regulations.

NEDC an acceptable meeting point: Walter Eltis

Sir Brian Wolfson, newly-knighted chairman of the leisure group Wembley, and chairman of the government's training task force, will head up the working party on this issue. He has identified the need for a review of competitiveness, quality and productivity in the sector.

The project will be looking at why many UK holidays offer poor value for money compared with continental Europe, whether there is a lack of inexpensive hotels, poorer management. The objective is to produce solutions and promote them to the industry.

Sir Brian is confident that many of the problems dogging the British tourism trade can be overcome. In fact, he predicts the deficit on tourism can be converted into a surplus in five years. Attitudes need to change. Catering and hotel work needs a better social image. Investment in all-weather leisure facilities is vital, more reasonably priced hotels a must.

A closely-related issue, the growing transport infrastructure of Britain's leading tourist magnet, London, is the subject of another working party to be chaired by John Ashworth, director-designate of the London School of Economics. Fears that under-investment in London's road and rail network are costing industry and commerce billions of pounds a year have been raised frequently, most recently by the Confederation of British Industry.

The supply-side focus will be particularly evident in two large projects, one in electronics and one in engineering, whose main task will be to establish ways of strengthening the supply of components to industries set up by large-scale inward investors, mainly from Japan.

Unless British suppliers can reach the quality and delivery requirements of the demanding new hi-technology and car companies, the full economic benefit of these industries will not be secured. In a rapidly integrating European market, components will be sourced abroad. Without a flourishing component supply sector, Britain could quickly lose popularity as an investment location for non-European firms.

It would be unwise, however, to read a permanent change of heart into the government's discernibly more favourable attitude to the NEDC. The mood is unlikely to change before the next general election. Another Conservative victory could bring further reduction. But a Labour win could mean a new dawn down at Millbank.

Colin Narbrough

BET polishes up its act

TEMPUS

BET is not quite going into its shell. But it is trying to catch breath after the hectic pace of takeover activity that in recent times has seen acquisitions at the rate of 40 companies a year.

For the moment, it is to concentrate on internal growth. Whether the market, which was beginning to believe BET wanted to take over the world, likes the step back from the takeover limelight remains to be seen.

However, it is only now that BET's share price is back to where it was pre-Hestair days, and the digestion phase has initially been welcomed.

Pre-tax profits at £322.3 million against £270.6 million were in line with expectations and brings the compound growth in net earnings over the past five years to 15.6 per cent. A final dividend of 9p (8p) makes 13p (11.5p), giving a compound five year growth of 13.2 per cent.

The year saw tougher conditions at the edges, but genuine growth within its empire with overall margins up from 12.9 per cent to 13.5 per cent. It was a year in which £438.5 million was spent on 52 acquisitions, including acquired debt, to lift net borrowings at March 31 from £98 million to £434.2 million.

The balance sheet result is a gearing of 81 per cent against 18 per cent, but a still healthy interest cover at 8.6 times against 13.5 times. Concern over cover need only arise if the four times level was challenged, but BET plans various disposals that should automatically ease the debt burden. One function of good-will write-off is to see shareholders' funds, less minority interests, back from £543.6 million to £335.5 million.

If, as likely, BET can further improve margins and pre-tax profits reach the £370 million level, then the prospective p/e at 7.8 based on a 25.2p share price will prove to have been cheap.

Severn Trent

SEVERN Trent's shares have the second lowest premium over issue price of the ten water groups privatised last December. They were offered on tighter terms than all but Thames because of likely local demand. Leading analysts concluded, by contrast, that they carried a higher-than-average risk because capital spending had to rise fast. Real dividend growth of about 3.5 per cent a year is, therefore, vulnerable to cost over-runs.

At 147½p, 10p below the weighted sector average, the dividend yield now exactly matches the average at 6.9 per cent. Some feel it should be higher.

Management will only prove its ability to handle the capital programme after two or three years. Meanwhile, there are signs of strength. Due to better technical performance, Severn Trent was able to calculate more of its capital spending in advance and is unlikely to have to ask the regulator for many favours.

Thanks to the unique inland location and superior privatisation performance, the group is less vulnerable than most to changes in standards. It does not dump sludge at sea and will probably have to spend less than most if the EC tightens river controls.

Management has a good record on meeting investment targets and came through under budget in 1989-90. If this continues, Severn Trent should outperform the sector in the long run.

But patience will be needed, since Severn Trent is one of the water groups whose profits are likely to edge down this year, curbing short-term dividend exuberance.

Reject Shop

THE big seller from The Reject Shop is the Stress Doll, which can be ripped apart in a fit of rage and then stuck back together again. Retailing at £14.99, the doll comes in a variety of guises, the traffic warden, the boss, the wife.

Reject shareholders may soon be ordering dolls in the shape of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whose high interest rate policy has depressed the group's sales and halved profits.

Those who subscribed for the shares at 140p when the group floated on the USM two years ago have seen them fall steadily to a low of 36p this month. But the shareholders who are most out of pocket are Anthony Hawser and Anna Vinton, the founders of the business. Their 83 per cent stake has fallen in value from £11.6 million to £3.32 million.

Pre-tax profits fell from £1.46 million to £743,000 for the year to March on sales of £17.4 million, up from £16.3 million. Earnings per share fell from 9.15p to 4.58p and the dividend has been maintained at 3.15p. Sales on a like-for-like basis fell 10 per cent last year, largely because of the downturn in furniture which accounts for more than 30 per cent of turnover.

Reject Shop will again make a loss in the first half but is expected to make pre-tax profits of £1 million for the full year, putting the shares, up 2p at 40p, on a price/earnings ratio of 6.5 times.

Gearing is low at 7 per cent and the dividend yield is a healthy 10 per cent. The shares are not expensive but it could take a fall in interest rates to breathe more life into them.

THE TIMES CITY DIARY

Jumping back in the pool

AFTER an absence of three years from the Square Mile, David Poole, one-time partner and chief executive of Capel-Cure Myers and managing director of ANZ merchant bank - which bought CCM - is about to return to the fold. Poole, son and heir to Lord Poole, an MP and Conservative party chairman in the Fifties, will be joining James Capel as head of its corporate finance department, with a seat on the main board. Due to start on July 16, Poole will replace Neil MacLachlan, who is leaving to become deputy MD of Svenska International, the British arm of Sweden's second biggest commercial bank. "I've been made an offer I can't refuse," says MacLachlan, who has been at Capel's for four years. Meanwhile, Poole, aged 45, has spent the past three years running Invest International, the private Luxembourg-based investment company controlled by Dr Carlo Bonomi, head of one of Italy's wealthiest families. "It was a three year contract which has now come to an end - but it was fascinating to be on the other side of the fence, as a customer of the firms in the City," says Poole, who broke his foot three months ago, disembarking from his boat, and still walks with a slight "hobble". He has, he says, no political aspirations himself but awaits with interest his 18-year-old son Oliver's choice of career. "His step-father is Norman Fowler, since my first wife Fiona is now married to him, and Oliver thus divides his time between the two households," says Poole. "It will be interesting to see if it influences him."

Double beat

KEEN to join in the fitness craze that seems to be sweeping the Square Mile, advisers from Hongkong & Shanghai Bank took to their bicycles this weekend to Brighton. John Blanchfield, Simon Kemp and Peter Litherland, of the bank's corporate finance team, were among 20,000 cyclists who were doing their bit for the British Heart Foundation. But Kemp was left behind after his front tyre exploded six miles into the race. "It sounded like a gun going off," says Blanchfield, aged 29, who was cycling alongside at the time. Kemp, nevertheless, finished the 58-mile race, although not in time for lunch. Between them they hope to have raised £600 for the BHF, a sum that the Hongkong & Shanghai has promised to double.

Allum on standby

GEOFF Allum, conglomerates analyst at County NatWest, has for the second time collected the bottle of champagne traditionally given by BET to the analyst whose forecast is closest to its actual year-end results. Also for the second time, Allum is morally obliged to hand over the bubbly to the person who did the number crunching, but has since left the firm. "Two years ago Robert Gibson made the nearest forecast, but he then left County to go to Flemings, and I collected his prize which is still in my desk drawer," bemoans Allum. "Yesterday, I again collected the prize but it really belongs to Andrew Page, who has also now left us to join the Foreign Office." Allum hopes his £370 million forecast will be third time lucky.

Cullum culled

PANMURE Gordon, the corporate broker owned by NCNB bank of North Carolina, in its drive to recruit top analysts, has persuaded Bill Cullum, hitherto with Lawrence Prust, to join its retail research team. Cullum, who will be starting work there before the end of this month, will be working alongside fellow stores analyst Mark Josephson - ex-Shearson Lehman Hutton - and stores salesman Jeremy Kerner. "This will make an extremely successful team," predicts Peter James, Panmure's chief executive, and a man known to be casting covetous eyes on other researchers in the Square Mile.

Rat race escape

DAVID Baxendale, a director of Gerrard & National, the discount house, until last October, is so determined to escape the rat race in London that he is planning to sell the bulk of a 500-acre estate he inherited and move north. Father-of-two Baxendale, aged 38, has accepted a consultancy role with newly-created Edinburgh broker Roderrick Sutherland & Partners, which he hopes will develop into a full-time job as a partner just as soon as his personal affairs are resolved. "I will leave my mother in situ in the family home, but I don't want to spend the rest of my life looking after the estate," says Baxendale, the eldest son and thus the main beneficiary of the estate. "I've always wanted to go north. I now have a strong desire to get away from the City of London because, although I love it, it has become a rat race." Sutherland's best-known recruit to date has been Ian McClean, previously head of UK equity sales at County NatWest WoodMac and then Citicorp Scrimgeour Vickers.

Carol Leonard

How would you like a discreet pager? A pager that wouldn't embarrass you in the theatre or library.

A pager so unobtrusive that no-one else need ever know you're getting a message at all.

Try our Message Master. As an alternative to beeping, it can vibrate, quietly. So you'll definitely get the feeling someone's trying to tell you something.

It'll also receive messages up to fifteen words long and can remember as many as forty of them.

Just think. With this pager, even the dullest messages can be sensational. If you'd like more information on our range of pagers, including those that work on the continent, or in the USA, call us on the number below.

JUST CALL FREE ON 0800 222 611

British TELECOM
It's you we answer to

[illegible][illegible][illegible][illegible]

Market rates for June 18
	Range	Close	1 month	3 months
New York	1.7060-1.7130	1.7120-1.7130	92.50-91.50	2.72-2.58p
Montreal	1.5986-1.6026	1.6016-1.6026	91.50-91.00	2.48-2.38p
London	1.6000-1.6050	1.6025-1.6050	1.5-1.5p	5.5-5.5p
Brussels	59.50-59.50	59.12-59.32	40-30p	78-71p
Frankfurt	10.925-10.925	10.925-10.925	3-1p	11-10p
Dublin	1.0729-1.0752	1.0735-1.0745	40-30p	114-104p
Paris	2.8076-2.8082	2.8076-2.8082	40-30p	114-104p
Madrid	1.737-1.738.35	1.737-1.738.35	4-2p	6-7p
Amsterdam	210.00-210.00	220.10-220.10	4-3p	6-7p
Oslo	11.0470-11.0488	11.0600-11.0636	3-1p	9-8p
Copenhagen	11.0470-11.0488	11.0470-11.0488	3-1p	9-8p
Stockholm	11.0470-11.0488	11.0470-11.0488	3-1p	9-8p
Tokyo	262.61-263.33	263.31-263.53	1-1p	2-4-10p
Hong Kong	2.4072-2.4083	2.4072-2.4083	1-1p	2-4-10p
Zurich	2.4072-2.4083	2.4072-2.4083	1-1p	2-4-10p
Argentina austral*	859.27-1.853.51
Australia dollar*	1.0117-1.0250
Bahrian dinar*	0.8405-0.8405
Brazil cruzado*	53.9855-55.0027
Canada dollar*	0.7090-0.7100
Finland mark*	6.7415-6.8082
French franc*	6.55-6.55
German mark*	1.80-1.80
Hong Kong dollar*	13.2624-13.3030
India rupee*	28.85-29.25
Japanese yen*	160.00-160.00
Malaysia ringgit*	4.2300-4.2300
Mexico peso*	2.477-2.477
New Zealand dollar*	0.6900-0.6900
Saudi Arabia riyal*	3.3715-4.8582
South African rand*	0.8405-0.8405
S Africa rand (fin)	0.8405-0.8405
S Africa rand (com)	4.5467-4.5467
Singapore dollar*	1.40-1.40

*Lloyds Bank, Rates supplied by

DOLLAR SPOT RATES
Ireland	1.5875-1.5930	Denmark	6.4140-6.4190
Singapore	1.8465-1.8475	W Germany	1.6858-1.6885
Malaysia	2.7112-2.7122	Switzerland	1.4290-1.4300
Australia	1.2295-1.2345	Netherlands	1.8973-1.8983
Canada	1.1715-1.1725	France	5.6750-5.6800
Sweden	6.0590-6.1030	Japan	153.98-154.08
Norway	6.4740-6.4790
		Italy	1236.4-1237.4
		Belgium (Com)	84.38-84.53
		Hong Kong	7.7825-7.7835
		Portugal	147.90-148.00
		Spain	104.00-104.10
		Austria	11.84-11.85

Rates quoted by Barclays Bank GTS and Fidelity

Money Markets		EURO MONEY DEPOSITS %
Base Rates %: Clearing Banks 15	Financo Hse 15%	Currency	3 day 1 mth 3 mth 6 mth
Discount Market Rates		Dollar:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
Overnight Highs 15-16 14 Week Lead 14%		Can:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
Treasury Bills (Discount %)		Can:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
2 1/2% 2 mths 1 1/2% 3 mths 1 1/2%		Swiss Franc:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
Selling: 2 mths - 14 1/2% 3 mths - 14 1/2%		Can:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
Bank of Canada (Discount %)	15 1/2%	Swiss Franc:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
2 mths 14 1/2% 1/4% 3 mths 14 1/2% 1/4%	6 mth 13 1/2% 1/4%	Can:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
2 mths 15% 3 mths 15%		Swiss Franc:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
2 mths 15% 3 mths 15% 6 mth 14 1/2%		Can:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
Interbank %: Overnight: open 14 1/2%	close 15	Yen:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%
2 mths 15 1/2% 3 mths 15 1/2%		Can:	8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8% 8 7/8%

20y: 14% 33y: 14% 3m: 14% 6m: 14%
3m: 14% 6m: 14% 12m: 14%
Sterling Cds 1 mth: 14¹/₂%
3 mth: 14¹/₂% 6m: 14¹/₂% 12m: 14%-14¹/₂%
Dollar Cds 1 mth: 8.23-8.18
3 mth: 8.28-8.23 6 mth: 8.37-8.32 12 mth: 8.52-8.47
Building Society Cds (%)
1 mth: 14¹/₂-14¹/₂ 2 mth: 14¹/₂-14¹/₂ 3 mth: 14¹/₂-14¹/₂
6 mth: 14¹/₂-14¹/₂ 9 mth: 14¹/₂-14¹/₂ 12 mth: 14¹/₂-14¹/₂

Open: $348.25-348.75 Close: $349.00-349.50
High: $349.50-350.00 Low: $348.25-348.75

GOLD COINS (Per coin, EX VAT)
Britannia: $356.00-361.00 (£208.50-211.50)
Kruggerand: $349.00-361.00 (£205.50-208.50)
Mapleleaf 1/2oz: $356.00-361.00 (£208.50-211.50)
American Eagle 1/2oz: $356.00-361.00 (£208.50-211.50)
New Sovereigns: $320.00-340.00 (£140.00-150.00)

LONDON FINANCIAL FUTURES

3-Month Treasury Bill				3-Month Treasury Note				3-Month Treasury Bond
Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr	Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr	Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr
Jun 90	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jul 90	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Aug 90	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Sep 90	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Oct 90	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Nov 90	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Dec 90	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jan 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Feb 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Mar 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Apr 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
May 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jun 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jul 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Aug 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Sep 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Oct 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Nov 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Dec 91	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jan 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Feb 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Mar 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Apr 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
May 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jun 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jul 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Aug 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Sep 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Oct 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Nov 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Dec 92	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jan 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Feb 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Mar 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Apr 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
May 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jun 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Jul 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Aug 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Sep 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73
Oct 93	2408.0	3421.0	2357.0	2293.0	2306	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73	90.73	89.73

[illegible]

Wrightford, A D Wright, A W Wright,
D G Wright, H J Wright, R F Wright,
R H T Wright, R W P Wright, W R
Wright, W H Wic, A J Wyatt, J Wyllie,
M D Wynne.

N Yannacopoulos, J P
Yannacopoulos, E A Yannakoudakis,
C J Cardillo, C S Vey, J A Vey,
F H K Yeung, C Y Yim, W C Ying, S
Yogarajah, C P Yong, J A Yonke, C A
York, A A Young, D A Young, G T
Young, N R J Younger, G N Younger, K C Yu, A P Yule, G S Yule, J A Yule,
M Zalgarn, M J Zienba, S R
Zienick, J E Zizovic, N Zobel, S
Zographos, R M Zuzarek & Zurick

THE SECURITY INDUSTRY

FOCUS

Technology that foils raiders in the high street

A n irate poll tax payer walks into his local council office brandishing a two-inch-thick plank. He wields it above his head and brings it crashing down on to a computer terminal. In a flash, a shutterproof screen shoots up between the man and a terrified member of staff.

That is not a scene from a Labour party political broadcast. The incident actually happened in the Home Counties and it illustrates graphically the battle that security experts are waging to curb the rise in theft and violence.

Technology has a part to play in council offices, to where the public have access, and authorities in areas with a history of violence have become more security-conscious as feelings have run high over the poll tax.

Screens separating staff and public can shoot up at the touch of a button or even if a raised alarm cuts through an infra-red beam.

High-street retailers, too, are becoming more alert to security, in their case because of the high cost of theft. Simon Cross, group marketing manager with Auto-Mark Securities, explains why: "They are under a lot of pressure with high interest rates and the implications of the effect of poll tax on spending. The one thing they can get right is to cut the £2 billion to £3 billion lost every year through theft by staff and shoplifting."

Apart from the proliferation of burglar alarm boxes along the high street, there are subtle ways of Crime is costing a fortune every year.

Rodney Hobson describes the latest methods used to combat the menace combating crime, Mr Cross says. Retailers are spending more than £230 million a year on closed-circuit television, and that part of the security market is growing by 40 per cent a year.

One system has a camera sitting above and linked to the till. It can be instructed to record certain transactions, such as any item of spurs that is rung up for less than £5. Mr Cross says: "Supposing a bottle of whisky is charged at only 50p. You can see who has made the mistake and who has benefited. We can analyse data to see if a staff member is letting family members have goods cheaply."

The tagging system widely seen in clothing stores where an alarm is set off if unpaid items are taken off the premises is being extended to items marked with a bar coding. Again, items such as a packet of soap powder or a can of beer can set off an alarm and trigger a camera that films the culprit.

A similar system can be used even to catch out store managers who try to boost turnover figures by throwing away food that has not reached its sell-by date. Mr Cross points out. A camera system can record what goes into the rubbish bin.

Banks, building societies and local authorities in particular have become much more security-conscious with the spread of open-plan offices that are more welcoming to the public. Despite this, Peter Manolescu, UK managing director of Fichtel, the European security group, explains that the experts have made premises more, not less, secure.

Mr Manolescu says: "The reason for open banking is that you see people queuing at a hole in the wall when there is a nice warm bank inside. Customers prefer not to go inside because banks still have a forbidding image."

"With open planning, the cash handling areas are pushed to the back. If they can be placed 45ft from the door, any would-be robber who walks through feels very exposed. When he is robbing a teller he does not know what is happening behind him."

He also has a choice between walking from door to cash desk with his face in full view — or wearing a balaclava and alerting everyone's attention.

Mr Manolescu points out that most bank robbers case the premises first, often trying out the planned raid in slow motion. A carefully designed layout can put him off the real thing.

Tellers are also restricted in the Keeping it safe: most businesses handling large amounts of money employ the professionals to carry their cash takings to the bank amount of cash they have readily to hand.

Mr Manolescu says: "The teller that is robbed is usually the one closest to the door. A robber will rush in, point a gun at the first cashier, grab what he can and rush out. If he is only going to get £200 it is just not economic when he can get a 10-year jail sentence for armed robbery."

It is estimated that crime costs companies' shareholders half their potential dividends.

Alternatively, some companies could pay all members of staff an extra £10 a week if they had no unauthorised losses. The construction industry loses an estimated £500 million a year and vandalism shunts British Rail back by about £400 million.

Mr Cross sums up: "Beating crime is going to become an important part of every business. Companies are losing between 2 and 2.5 per cent off the bottom line and if we can halve that we shall save a lot of money."

"The Institute of Directors believes the cost of fraud to industry is £3.3 billion."

COMPUTERISED central controls operated by security companies are cutting the number of false alarm calls and the waste of police time (Rodney Hobson writes).

Modern Alarms has invested more than £750,000 in designing and installing sophisticated computer systems for dealing with calls in four stations. The company has 170,000 subscribers.

The alarm calls alert private central controls instead of People who find it pays to be alarmed going directly to police stations. Calls are checked with clients to identify possible false alarms before the police are contacted. Checking takes only a few seconds but the saving of police time is dramatic.

The ADT company spokesman says: "The operator has only to press one key and all details of the premises come up on the computer screen. Once the call is verified, another key sends all the details to police central control. The police can locate the source of an alarm within seconds of it going off and they can have someone on the road in less than a minute. The only way to guarantee that ringing alarms will be investigated promptly is to cut false alarms drastically."

The verification system has changed the attitude of those who own alarms. The ADT spokesman says: "In the past, clients with false alarm calls were bolshy. With the verification system they have become apologetic. They have begun to realise that many false alarms are their own fault. The result is that companies have trained staff not to set off alarms and to be more careful punching in numbers."

Security companies are also working on more sophisticated systems so that false alarms are not caused by, for example, boxes falling over in a warehouse or by an alarm being too near a radiator.

One police estimate suggests that it costs £100 to answer every false alarm. The present annual bill stands at £107 million, rising to an estimated £600 million by the end of the century.

It is claimed that time spent investigating false alarms is equivalent to 1,200 policemen doing nothing else all day.

Even genuine alarms give no guarantee of apprehending a criminal. ADT admits that only 10 per cent of real alerts result in an arrest.

However, the company says: "In 1988, the latest year for which Home Office figures are available, there were 5,400 arrests as a result of alarm calls. That's a lot of arrests."

Secured: this alarm can control 64 detection devices

THORN Security is committed to providing the highest quality products and customer service in the fire-protection, security and energy management industries.

With over 60 branches and four quality approved manufacturing plants in the UK and a major presence in Europe, the Far East and the USA, THORN Security fulfils this commitment in every country in which it operates.

THORN Security

THORN Security Limited
Security House Twickenham Road
Feltham Middlesex TW13 6JQ
Telephone 081-755 3333
Telex 8814916 Fax 081-755 0831

SAFETY SECURITY AND CONSERVATION

You want a home security system, but you've heard that most alarms are ignored.

What do you do?

- Move next door to the police station
- Put extra locks on your doors (and hope no one breaks in through a window)
- Call Telecom Security free on 0800 010 999

As soon as an intruder is detected by a Telecom Security System, an electronic signal is instantly sent down your telephone line to our Central Monitoring Station.

Within seconds, we alert the police for you.

The system also detects smoke. And there's a panic button for medical emergencies.

For an installation fee from just £195, plus a monthly monitoring and system hire fee of £14.95*, you have a security system that is comprehensive, easy to use — and gets immediate results.

For your free copy of our colour brochure, simply call us free on 0800 010 999. Or complete the coupon and return it Freepost today.

Telecom Security — Britain's best-selling professionally-installed home security system from British Telecom.

CALL FREE 0800 010 999 ANYTIME

Yes, I'd like to know more about how Telecom Security can protect my home and family. Please send me my free copy of your colour brochure without delay.

Mr/Mrs/Ms: Initials _____ Surname _____ (BLOCK CAPITALS)

Address _____

Postcode _____

Tel. (code) _____ (no.) _____

Please send to: British Telecom, Telecom Security Systems, FREEPOST 880 (155555), Bristol BS1 6EZ.

No stamp needed.

DEC 155

*Prices may be varied at the end of the two year minimum hire period. Telecom Security Limited is a subsidiary of British Telecommunications plc.

British TELECOM
It's you we answer to 150/151

Who checks the guards?

Rodney Hobson reports on the campaign for a licensed security industry

The bombing of the Royal Marines barracks at Deal, Kent, which was patrolled not by the military but by a private firm, brought security companies into the public eye, especially with the revelation that the Ministry of Defence is using 17 different security companies employing 250 people to help to protect 30 establishments.

Public unease over security outfits is shared by responsible operators disappointed that the latest attempt to introduce licensing for the security industry, Sir John Wheeler's Security Industry Bill, failed earlier this year after gaining a second reading.

Many within the industry want to see a licensing system. Indeed, such calls have been made for the past 20 years. The responsible operators are uneasy that anyone can set up a security company without any form of restriction. They can even employ people with criminal records.

Meanwhile, the rapid growth of the industry has, if anything, added a greater urgency to the calls for regulation.

Jim Harrower, managing director of Group 4, says: "Major security companies have repeatedly called for some form of government control, given every encouragement to those who have attempted to introduce the necessary legislation and co-operated with every initiative designed to improve matters."

"What this has achieved on the one hand is a security industry that takes its responsibilities very seriously and spends large sums on the vetting and training of its employees."

"But on the other hand we still have a small but increasing number of security com-

Security guards stop and check a car entering a building site: but not all guards are vetted or trained properly panies which are run by or employ people with criminal records or whose standards are unacceptably low. They represent a small percentage of the industry but their actions, or lack of them, give the rest of us a bad name and could put lives and property at risk."

Some believed that the government, with its emphasis on law and order, would be more receptive to controls on security outfits. Indeed, it was a Conservative MP, Norman Fowler, who in 1973 introduced a Security Industry Licensing Bill into parliament. It failed to get a final reading.

Matters were made worse in 1976 when the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act introduced the concept of "spent" convictions. Many offences committed five or more years ago no longer need to be declared by an applicant for a job in security.

After a second attempt to introduce statutory controls, this time from the Labour side, also failed at the final reading in 1979, the government decided in 1980 that licensing was unnecessary.

Since then, several embarrassing cases have come to light. David Owen, Chief Constable of North Wales Police, revealed that of 609 security firms surveyed, 392 had employees with criminal records and a further 32 were run by people with criminal associates.

Another 144 were managed by people with no qualification for the job. BBC Television found a guard at a security firm who had been in prison for armed robbery against a security company. A security guard employed by the Home Office was an experienced crook with six jail terms for arson, malicious wounding and burglary.

For the past 10 years the security industry has policed itself through the British Security Industry Association, founded in 1976 to advance the standards of the industry. When the then Home Secretary, William Whitelaw, decided in December 1980 that licensing was unnecessary, the BSIA set about forming its own national inspectorate. It came into operation two years later.

At that time the BSIA had 24 inspected companies employing 24,341 people. Following a change in rules to allow smaller members to join, the BSIA now has 155 inspected members with 70,000 staff.

What worries those who call for a licensing system is that membership still represents only about 90 per cent of turnover in the industry, with non-members proliferating. Nobody knows how many

Group 4's Mr Harrower adds: "While the BSIA and its members have been extremely successful in imposing and maintaining high standards, they are powerless to do anything about those individuals or companies who choose to operate independently for various reasons, not least of which is their need to spend £1,000 or more on the vetting and training of each employee."

How to detect the spy bugs in the boardroom

Never mind the paranoia about electronic eavesdropping. James Bond has no place in the boardroom. He is too highly qualified. Detecting eavesdropping or computer fraud is more a matter of using a little common sense, according to one expert.

Chris Brogan, who runs Security International from Isleworth, west London, reckons companies are bamboozled by the investigators as much as by the cheats (Rodney Hobson writes).

He describes the use of bugging as immoral and professionally offensive and points out: "How can a company offer to sell bugs and also find them? Are they planting the bugs that they claim to find in your boardroom?"

Mr Brogan insists that a staff member of a client should accompany him whenever he walks round with his black box and radio antenna searching for the tell-tale radio signal. That way, nobody can accuse him of planting the bug.

Planting bugs is not only illegal, it is often ineffective. Some on the market have 1.5 volt batteries that are too weak to pick up voices from more than a couple of feet away and which run down between being planted in an empty boardroom on Saturday morning and the start of the board meeting on Monday.

In fraud investigations, evidence obtained through illegal bugging will not stand up in court. Mr Brogan says: "Some of my colleagues forget their basic investigative skills and start to take short cuts. If a case gets to court, they stand no chance against a barrister." Despite his background in military intelligence in the Royal Air Force, he says that "most computer fraud could be spotted by an ordinary audit clerk. It has been given a fancy name and glorified but a fraud is a fraud is a fraud."

Investigator Chris Brogan: "No one is beyond reproach"

Mr Brogan says detecting fraud and eavesdropping is only 25 per cent electronic and 75 per cent physical.

Checking on whether an employee has suddenly taken on an expensive lifestyle is a simple way of detecting fraud.

He adds: "If you said about someone 'I would trust him with my life,' that is the first chap I would suspect. I have investigated dukes and a bishop. Do not tell me anyone is beyond reproach."

Electronic surveillance and detection methods are getting more sophisticated and expensive. Mr Brogan has come across a device that can tap telephone lines and cannot be detected by electronic means.

Bug-sweeping equipment costs £4,000 and the latest device will set the budding detective back £28,000. It can even find a defunct bug from the oxidation of metal parts. Unfortunately, rusty nails produce the same effect on the detector.

Security is in the bag

DRAWING the line between self-defence and carrying an offensive weapon can be difficult. While the law allows the use of reasonable force to protect life and property, companies marketing such items as high-security bags are constantly searching for new products (Rodney Hobson writes).

A typical dilemma comes in manufacturing cases for carrying valuables. One line of approach is a case that emits dye and smoke when snatched. Unfortunately thieves are liable to leap straight into a getaway car, and crashes have been known. It could be just a matter of time before a car crashed into a bus queue.

Sometimes innovations come from smaller companies, such as John Sharp in Gillingham, Kent, which has been in the leather business before the days of making harnesses for horse-drawn milk floats. Much of its £1 million a year business these days is in night safe wallets for leading banks.

Sharp is about to market a case with a sophisticated defence mechanism. It is linked to a radio transmitter the size of a box of matches. Once the case is more than four yards from the transmitter, it starts to search for the signal. Unless owner and case come back together, a powerful alarm is sounded after ten seconds.

Graham Sharp (centre) with a range of security bags

As a precaution against error, the owner has another ten seconds to recover the case and the alarm system switches off. Otherwise the handle and sides of the case are electrified, giving the thief a sore arm for half an hour. At this stage, only a key holder can switch the case off.

Graham Sharp, a director at the family-owned company, says counsel's opinion reckons the bag is within the bounds of the law. His market is anyone who has to move small valuables around. He adds: "We are aiming for anybody or any company that moves property, but where the sums are too small or the distance too short to use a security company."

Coin and stamp dealers visiting exhibitions or clients spring readily to mind. But banks that need to shift comparatively small amounts over short distances at short notice are likely buyers. Cases range in price from £40 to £500.

Imagine having on call every specialist skill you need to reduce your corporate risks.

In Securicor Consultancy, specialist skills in risk analysis and threat assessment have been channelled into one dynamic centre.

Numerous risk control programmes are available, each designed to reduce corporate risk exposure. They include Awareness, Education and Training; Computer Security; Contingency Planning; Corporate

1. Sir Colin Woods MBE CBE OPM (Chairman) 2. Royman Vining CBE OPM 3. Ken Banks CBE FIEE 4. Andrew Bridges 5. Frank Carter OPM 6. Bill Liddell MBE 7. Mike Cress 8. David Cress 9. David East OPM LLB (SIL) 10. Richard Helliwell 11. Sir John Harcourt OBE OPM CML 12. Denis Hignam CBE FBM 13. Peter Jones FIP FIEE 14. George Quintrell MBE 15. Bill Robinson 16. Roger Trail 17. Russell Taylor 18. Howard Trill MBE

Investigations and Audits; Crisis Management; Electronic Counter-Surveillance; Executive Protection; Facilities Management; Psychometric Assessments; Recruitment and Placement; Screening and Vetting.

A telephone call will give you instant access to Securicor's group of dedicated risk managers who will execute your brief anywhere in the world.

ADT WINNING THE WAR ON FALSE ALARMS

ADT Security Systems are the world's leading security company - and with good reason. The greatest threat to the security of your home and business over the next decade will come from the ever increasing numbers of alarm systems combined with a 98% false alarm rate. If trends continue unchecked, the police may be overwhelmed by sheer volume, putting life and property at potential risk. ADT Security Systems have the lowest false alarm rate, for comparable property at potential risk. By harnessing technology and human skill ADT have been actively fighting a war on false alarms for many years. Verification of alarm signals, including fire alarms, through an ADT central station is done by computer and by trained operators on a 365 day 24hr basis. Quality of service, integrity of equipment and commitment to the continued reduction of real false alarms all help maintain ADT Security Systems reputation for excellence.

For details of ADT Security Systems central station linked services including: integrated fire alarms, intruder alarms, environmental monitoring and hold-up alarms OR details of CCTV, access control, and other stand-alone security products call Free 0800 282460.

*1.5 false alarms per year per system against averages of between 3 and 6.

ADT Security Systems, Security House, Trafalgar Way, Camberley, Surrey GU15 3BN. Tel: 0276 692737. Fax: 0276 681378.

ADT Security Systems is a subsidiary of ADT, the world's leading electronic security protection and vehicle auctions company.

SECURICOR CONSULTANCY LIMITED

Sutton Park House, 15 Carshalton Road, Sutton, Surrey SM1 4LE. Telephone: 081 770 7000 Fax: 081 643 3403 Telex: 8814827

Operating on theft

A new hospital acts against the criminals

EVEN HOSPITALS are fair game for criminals these days, so Thorn Security has designed and installed a closed-circuit television system for the safety of patients and staff at the Glenfields hospital in Leicester.

The Glenfield, opened in 1984, is the county's newest teaching hospital. It had gained a reputation for medical pioneering — and for thefts from cars and vandalism of vehicles (Rodney Hobson writes). It had reached the point where an incident was reported every day. One nurse suffered three cases of theft or damage, and recruitment was affected.

Closed-circuit television allowed unrestricted access but provided a strong deterrent to potential criminals. When it was installed, the first step was to fit an external camera that could pan, tilt and zoom. Six fixed cameras were also placed in strategic positions. Later, three more external cameras and two internal ones were added.

All 12 cameras are monitored from the hospital's main reception desk, where the screen can be split to receive up to 16 separate pictures simultaneously. Alternatively, the monitor can switch from camera to camera in a pre-arranged pattern. A standard £180 video-tape can hold up to 480 hours of images. If an incident is reported later, the tape can be played back to the corresponding date and time.

At night, in unmanned areas, the system detects and records any disturbance. Cameras can be re-sited if hospital equipment has to be left unattended.

One advantage the hospital has found is that the person spotting the crime is well away from the scene and can alert security staff or the police without getting involved in a potentially violent situation.

Fraud may be costing British business £500 million a year. Jon Ashworth reports on the solutions

The big fiddles

New construction works, as in London's Docklands, are a prime target for fraudsters company profile by talking to staff and checking cash and computer systems. They can then suggest ways to correct any problems.

Charles Shaw, marketing director for WBK, another firm of risk management consultants, said WBK's role covered everything from internal fraud to computer crime and the threat of industrial stoppages. Consultants may also be called in by insurance underwriters to vet companies before policies are issued.

This latter role is a familiar one to WBK, which was set up by the Sedgwick insurance group in 1979. It has worked with most of the big British banks, assessing whether staff are up to their job, and recommending measures to help prevent fraud among employees.

Mr Shaw says: "More than 50 per cent of losses in an organisation can be through errors caused by bad management or lack of training." He adds that fraud is becoming a growing headache for many British companies. While £153 million was saved last year by companies who spotted fraud in time, another £139 million slipped through the net. At best, companies are stopping only 40 per cent.

"We do not know what is going on behind the scenes," Mr Shaw says. "Many crimes are simply not reported because companies are paranoid about bad publicity."

He says the growing reliance on computers and other electronic tools has made it easier for fraudsters to operate. For £1,000 a day, WBK will send in two consultants to see whether or not a company is up to scratch. It will look at computer and fund transfer systems, as well as talking to senior and junior staff to see how they fit in. Physical security is also considered.

Once their job is complete, the consultants prepare a detailed analytical review, breaking the business down and recommending ways of preventing risk. After that, it is up to the company to decide whether or not to do anything about it. The final bill for a one-day survey, including a report, can be more than £3,000. Some would say this is a drop in the ocean compared with the amounts at risk.

Management consultancy has always been profitable for big accountancy firms, so it is not surprising that they have launched a strong push into risk management. Their teams not only look at the day-to-day concerns of running a business, but are often asked to look at the risks facing big construction projects, such as the Channel Tunnel, or Canary Wharf, Docklands in London's East End.

Leslie Zurick, a management consultancy partner with KPMG Peat Marwick McLintock, the accountant, says such large-scale research hinges on whether or not a risk is likely to happen.

"It is a matter of going in and talking to engineers and looking at the costs and time involved," says Mr Zurick, who explains that so-called "probability theory" — deciding whether or not a risk is likely to happen — plays a key part in the analysis.

Charles Evers, the partner in charge of actuarial and risk management services, says the firm advises companies on their whole approach to risk. "It takes in any sort of risk that may threaten assets or earnings," he explains. "Our main theme is that every company ought to be methodical and systematic in weighing up the kinds of risk that might cause damage."

How to crack the hackers

SECURING computers against outside interference is still a vague notion for many users, despite warnings about hackers and viruses (Rodney Hobson writes). Although the English Law Commission has recommended the outlawing of hacking, the legislation has not found its way into the government's programme.

Businesses have three considerations in assessing computer security: ● Confidentiality. Access to sensitive or valuable information must be restricted. ● Integrity. Information must be protected from misuse. ● Availability. Important services must be made available when required or replaced quickly when lost.

Gary Hardy, an associate in the computer security section at Touche Ross, the management consultants, complains: "Computer security has remained a narrow specialist field understood by few people. Most businesses and public organisations are lucky to have anyone who understands the finer points of control and the general security of their systems. If they do, they are a prized and rare resource."

Information technology specialists are generally more interested in what their computers can do rather than in keeping them secure, and most users want a computer that is easy to operate.

Mr Hardy says: "Security and control in the computer world is sadly still something most designers add as an afterthought. Often, because of cost, inadequate manual controls are put in place as a substitute for the real thing."

"The vast majority of computer crime, like any other crime, exploits simple, basic weaknesses. Intruders usually find gaping holes in the systems they attack. The only effective way to secure a computer system properly is to construct the controls into the system from scratch."

In research by Gallup for this year's Which Computer? Show at the National Exhibition Centre, Birmingham, six out of 10 respondents admitted their computer system was open to abuse. A frightening 17 per cent realised they had already been the victims of hacking. British industry loses an estimated £400 million to hackers a year.

A further 11 per cent of businessmen interviewed knew there were viruses in their systems.

Robert Neery at Cranfield IT Institute in Milton Keynes, Buckinghamshire, is organising a computer security course for managers because he thinks many existing courses are too technical and are aimed at the defence industry. The course, probably two or three days long, will be available this year.

Mr Neery says: "Businessmen often do not understand simple password discipline, and loopholes exist because there is not sufficient education. Security expensively obtained can be compromised by the most junior operator."

Tony Moore: a warning

The capacity for destruction by a disgruntled employee is enormous. Half an hour or even less is enough. 'Bombs' to wipe out files can be activated long after the employee has gone."

Tony Moore, at ICL Defence Systems, says even security-conscious companies can be vulnerable when rules are broken. He says: "A payroll run fails, for example, and when the systems manager is called in he decides normal practice must be set aside to have the payroll produced in time. A well formed policy should be flexible enough to encompass these inevitable emergencies by providing a comprehensive audit of action taken. Computer crimes can proliferate where these actions are not known about."

After a National Audit Office report, even the government realised that security for its computer systems was poor. It developed a method of assessing the security of systems used by government departments and reduced the need for specialist advice, a lead that industry in Britain and abroad has followed with interest. The method, known as CRAMM — Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency Risk Assessment Methodology — is also available to industry through Touche Ross.

There are three stages. Stage one involves a thorough identification and valuation of data and physical assets.

Stage two sees how security could be compromised, assesses potential threats and finds the vulnerable points.

Stage three defines what protection is required and selects counter-measures.

Mr Hardy says: "With these new tools, at least we should see systems being designed with security in mind. The 1990s should see suppliers and designers building systems for users and management that demand a safe and secure computer system."

These hopes may yet be fulfilled. The Which Computer? survey found that three-quarters of companies now have a policy on computer security.

Robbery without violence that almost succeeds

New companies are cracking down on stealing by employees

IF THE cost of dishonesty were not so great, some incidents of employees cheating their companies would be funny. Often it is only when a business is in danger of going to the wall that it discovers how much is being filched, from petty stealing of stationery to organised removal of quality products.

Such developments are nothing new to David Benn, the managing director of Lorraine Electronics, of Leyton, east London (Rodney Hobson writes). He investigated a company which was losing products from its warehouse, despite excellent security and rigid control of vehicles and drivers.

It transpired that fraudulent orders for legitimate customers were being sent in on order books forged by a local printer, the brother of one of the drivers. Boxes containing goods were sent out with certain drivers, but because the orders were not genuine, the cartons were returned to the warehouse.

By that time, the contents had been removed and the cartons stuffed with newspapers and resealed. The bogus cartons were destroyed later.

Another company could not understand why it was being beaten consistently by a large rival. Investigations showed that two trusted employees had been bribed to supply information to the competitor. When the competitor was confronted with evidence and a demand for compensation, it paid up rather than risk court action and the attendant publicity.

Skulduggery naturally extends to takeover bids. Mr Benn found one company had set its sights on buying a leading competitor as cheaply as possible. So it infiltrated middle management in the target company.

Bribed executives deliberately created losses, driving the share price down. Lorraine Electronics helped to identify the problem and to avert disaster.

Investigating "hidden" crime: David Benn, of an electronic-surveillance company

A SMALL company tucked away in East Anglia is taking a swipe at computer fraud. Nighthawk Electronics has just produced a remarkably simple device that sits on a computer keyboard and prevents unauthorised people from logging on to personal computers (Rodney Hobson writes).

Called the PC-Guardian, it operates like the "swipe-through" machines seen at many supermarkets and restaurants where a credit or debit card transaction is recorded automatically.

In this case, staff are issued with plastic cards carrying a magnetic stripe programmed to allow them to "log on" and be given their authorised level

Guardian of the computer secrets of access. As an extra security precaution, companies can choose to add a personal identity number for each user, just as bank cards have a "pin number" giving access to teller machines.

Even where access to a computer system has to be provided over the telephone wire, control is maintained because an authorised person at base has to use a plastic card to allow access to the "outsider."

Special files can be kept from public gaze by keeping them in a queue accessible to, say, only the finance director's card.

The system also protects against viruses. Access to the floppy disc drive can be disabled to all but the system manager. A known "clean" system can be kept that way.

Backed by the Department of Trade and Industry, Nighthawk, of Debden, Essex, took the prototype to an electronics trade fair in Hamburg earlier this year. As a result, a big security company based in Frankfurt has asked to market the system in West Germany, under its own name, and a first order has rolled in from the United States.

In Britain, seven leading companies, including banks, are trying out the system. A large food company that has taken the safety device is even using its own existing in-house security passes instead of the cards supplied by Nighthawk.

Some companies in Eastern Europe are also interested. The PC-Guardian, costing £200 for a system and five cards, has its attractions, but Tina Knight, the managing director, jokes: "We may have to accept goods on barter to sell over there."

THE HIGHEST STANDARDS COME AS STANDARD.

Today, you could settle for any one of a large number of standard security companies.

But isn't your business worthy of the security company that sets the standards?

At Group 4 we have spent over 50 years leading the way in the security industry, providing first-rate manpower, advanced technology, and secure package and data delivery.

Everything about our operation is superior. Our staff are the most thoroughly vetted and trained. (Indeed, many major companies send their in-house security personnel on our unrivalled training courses).

Our range of services is totally comprehensive. And we tailor services to suit individual customer requirements.

It's not surprising then that we're so successful.

Our reputation for quality, experience and reliability ensures we maintain our long-held position as Europe's largest security organisation.

So when you're thinking about security, choose the only name that's synonymous with it.

Group 4 Total Security. Otherwise, you could be putting your business at risk.

Group 4 Total Security Limited.
Pembroke House, Broadway, Wrexham, WIR1 2LA.
Tel (0366) 654585 - Fax (0366) 652861

Reducing the risk element in any security situation can only be achieved by thorough preparation and training. The Paladin Group, operating both domestically and internationally, will advise on, deal with, and supply training in, each of the following areas:

The Risk Reducers

• Protection services • Risk management • Political risk analysis • Security audits • Computer security • Personal and corporate threat response • Hostile takeovers • Product tampering • Hostage survival • International terrorism. Write or call in complete confidence:

THE PALADIN GROUP LTD

6 Cantelupe Mews
East Grinstead, West Sussex RH19 3BG
Telephone (0342) 410652. Fax (0342) 410654

HOSPITAL
and COMMUNITY HEALTH SERVICES

Salary within the range:
£20,750 -
£44,500

Continued from page 16

PUBLIC APPOINTMENTS

McKinsey & Company, the foremost international strategy consulting firm, seeks a Head of Information Services for its London office.

The Information Services department is a resource centre of publications, documents and data on specific industries and on all matters affecting business strategy. It gathers and synthesizes information into a structured form for consultants and provides speedy response to requests for research and analysis.

Head of Information
Services

You will have a record of achievement in management, leading and developing staff and deploying costs and resources effectively. Experience of information, research or library services and familiarity with the latest database systems would be highly desirable.

As a consultancy, the Firm delivers to its clients the highest possible standard of performance. The challenge in this position is to ensure that the Information Services function delivers equally high standards to McKinsey staff.

If you are interested in becoming Head of Information Services with McKinsey please send your curriculum vitae to Don Leslie, recruiting adviser to the Firm, at Beament Leslie Thomas, 107-111 Fleet Street, London EC4A 2AB, or telephone him on 071-353 5606 (day) or 071-354 5229 (evenings and weekends).

McKinsey & Company

McKinsey & Company, Inc.
74 St. James's Street, London SW1A 1PS

Charity Management

CC Training is a charity providing training in Devon. Continual growth in the range of training opportunities calls for a strengthening of the management team supporting the Chief Executive.

An Operations Manager is sought to provide economic management of existing training and the development of new courses. This is a senior management post involving regular contact with local industry and training establishments. Experience of training, while not essential, would be an advantage.

Age is not critical, but a temperament suited to a lively team is important.

Salary £17,000. Location Exeter. Please write in confidence with full CV to Geoffrey Elms, Charity Appointments, 3 Spital Yard, London E1 6AQ.

Charity Appointments
A registered charity serving the voluntary sector.

NATIONAL AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT OFFICERS ASSOCIATION

nalgo

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY
GENERAL SECRETARY

Applications are invited for the appointment of Deputy General Secretary of NALGO to succeed Alan Jinkinson, following his election as General Secretary.

The salary is £40,761 rising by annual increments to £44,052 per annum (including London weighting allowance).

The appointment is terminable by not less than three months notice in writing on either side and is superannuable under the NALGO Staff Superannuation Fund rules.

The suitability of applicants will be considered regardless of race, marital status, gender, sexuality, disablement or age (up to 65). NALGO has a job sharing scheme which may be applicable to this post.

Full details and application form available upon request from the Personnel Officer, NALGO, 1 Mabledon Place, London WC1H 9AJ. Tel. 071-388 2366 Ext. 331. Completed application forms must be received by the Personnel Officer no later than July 5 1990.

On the Agenda

A New Role in Committee Servicing

Efficient and effective Committee Servicing is a vital activity in any County Council. Mindful both of this, and the many changes and challenges facing Local Government, we at Wiltshire are re-structuring our Chief Executive's Department so that Secretariat and Legal Services are more clearly focused in two separate Divisions.

As a result, an opportunity has arisen for a resourceful and ambitious person to join us as:

ASSISTANT COUNTY SECRETARY

£28,863 to £31,755 + substantial benefits

Primarily your task, at the head of a 60 strong team, will be to ensure that the Council's various Committees are supported by high quality service at all times. In addition you will also take executive responsibility for essential central support services, and will hold an influential position in the management of the Council's corporate affairs.

It's a demanding role that calls for substantial relevant experience and a record of achievement in Committee Administration. A graduate or equivalent, you should display the leadership and organisational ability that gets results, and the sensitivity that earns the respect of members and officers alike. If you also have experience in the development of I.T., so much the better.

In return we can offer you a stimulating career in a County of rapid growth and surprising contrasts. Salary will be in the range £28,863 to £31,755 and benefits include car, mortgage subsidy and relocation package to £6,000.

Nicol Smith, the County Secretary and Solicitor will be pleased to discuss the post informally with you. Telephone him on (0225) 753644, ext. 3000. To apply please telephone ext. 3018/3013 or write for further details and an application form to the County Secretary and Solicitor (PAS/CEG), Wiltshire County Council, County Hall, Trowbridge, Wiltshire, BA14 8JN.

Closing date for applications: 6th July, 1990.

Preliminary interviews will be 11th and 12th July. Final interviews will be 17th and 18th July.

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES EMPLOYER

Wiltshire COUNTY COUNCIL

HARTLEPOOL HEALTH AUTHORITY

UNIT GENERAL MANAGER

HOSPITAL
and
COMMUNITY HEALTH SERVICES

For this newly created post we require a General Manager with the professional skills and leadership qualities to take Hartlepool forward into a period of major change.

The initial task will be to integrate devolved functions from District Headquarters and those within the existing Unit to provide a range of complementary services within a single provider unit. The successful candidate will be expected to build upon existing strengths in devising a management structure to facilitate this process.

The Unit will have a revenue budget of c. £25M. Major external refurbishment and other developments to a value of nearly £20M, are planned over the next two years.

The post which is offered on a three year rolling contract basis offers an outstanding opportunity for an imaginative forward thinking individual who clearly understands the practices and principles of effective general management. The successful candidate will have a good track record in managing change and achieving results.

Hartlepool is situated on the North East Coast of England within easy reach of open, unspoilt countryside and with easy access to major towns and cities such as Newcastle upon Tyne, Durham, Darlington and the urban area of Teesside. The District serves a population of 145,000.

Informal discussion would be welcome by the District General Manager, Mr. Nigel Curtis, on (0429) 266654 extension 2900.

An information package is available from the District Personnel Officer, District General Hospital, Holdforth Road, HARTLEPOOL, Cleveland, TS24 9AH.

Applications by C.V. to the District Personnel Officer should be received by 6th July 1990.

Interviews will take place on 18th/19th July, 1990.

HARTLEPOOL
HEALTH AUTHORITY

DIRECTOR OF ROADS AND TRANSPORT

£39,171/41,847 p.a.
(Pay Award Pending)

Highland is geographically the largest local authority in the United Kingdom with responsibility for providing major services in a Scottish Region covering 9,800 square miles for a population of over 200,000.

With the implementing retiral of the present Director, the Council is seeking to appoint his successor to commence in November 1990.

Based in Inverness and operating through a headquarters staff and eight divisional offices, the Director will lead a major department responsible, for a road network of some 7,000 kms including 750 kms of trunk roads and a range of functions which include the design of capital works, co-ordination of all aspects of public transport, management and operation of marine and fishing piers, vehicle maintenance, ferry services, street lighting, coast protection and oil pollution.

Applicants must be Chartered Civil Engineers with corporate membership of the Institution of Civil Engineers, and have had substantial experience at a senior level in management.

Requests for application forms should be addressed to the Director of Manpower Services, Highland Regional Council, Regional Buildings, Glenurquhart Road, Inverness, IV3 5HQ, (Tel 0433 234121), quoting the relevant post number. Closing date 6th July 1990.

HASTINGS BOROUGH COUNCIL BOROUGH
SECRETARY

Salary up to £31,745 + Lease Car
+ PRP up to 20% + Fees

The Council are seeking a replacement for the Borough Secretary who is due to retire in November 1990.

The postholder will head the Borough Secretary's Department which provides a full secretarial, administrative and legal service to the Borough Council and will also act as Monitoring Officer, Returning Officer for Local Elections and Electoral Registration Officer.

Applicants must be professionally qualified Solicitors or Barristers with substantial senior management experience.

Hastings is a progressive Authority with a commitment to the regeneration of the town's tourism and the development of Commercial facilities and is seeking to maximise the opportunities presented by its proximity to the Channel Tunnel.

Steeped in history the town has a long tradition of civic ceremony as one of the Cinque Ports and is proud of its position at the heart of the 1066 country.

A generous relocation package including 100% removal expenses and up to £4,500 towards legal and professional fees is available. A lodging allowance of up to £100 per week is also available.

For an informal discussion on the post, please contact Roger Carrier, the Chief Executive on Hastings (0424) 722026.

Closing date is: 11 July 1990.

Application forms and further particulars are available from the Town Hall, Queens Road, Hastings TN34 1QR Telephone (0424) 722026.

Hastings Borough Council is an Equal Opportunities Employer.

HASTINGS heart of the 1066 country

PUBLIC FINANCE

ADDISON HOUSING ASSOCIATION
(part of Notting Hill Housing Group)MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTANT

(£15,204-£17,999)

We are a leading shared ownership housing association with an interest in over 1300 properties in West London. Our rapid expansion has placed increased demands on our Financial Controller who now wishes to hand over the day-to-day responsibilities for the running of a small team and the regular financial activities.

Experienced, practical and ideally professionally qualified, your qualities of organisation, common sense, and flexibility will enable you to develop your abilities in financial control, management of computerised accounts and audit requirements. You will manage the section of finance staff and liaise regularly with other senior colleagues in the association.

Benefits include generous leave and flexible working arrangements, plus contributory pension scheme and life assurance.

For an informal chat please telephone David Richards on 081-741 1570.

For an application form and further details please telephone 081-741 8498 (24 hour answering machine) quoting reference ACC or write to Rose Hubble, Recruitment Assistant, Notting Hill Housing Group, 26 Paddenswick Road, London, W6 0UB.

Closing Date: 29th June 1990.

Nottingham Hill Housing Group is an equal opportunities employer.

We operate a no-smoking policy.

Notting Hill

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS

Continued on next page

Company Secretary/Legal Adviser

A highly acquisitive industrial management company

London

Our client is a dynamic industrial management company with a full Stock Exchange listing and interests in consumer leisure products, specialist distribution and specialist packaging. The Company is characterised by its particularly experienced management team and distinguished board. Turnover is currently in excess of £100m. The Company is highly acquisitive and has ambitious growth plans for the future.

The successful candidate will be an essential member of the small central management group and will have complete responsibility for all company secretarial and legal matters.

Aged 30-35, you will probably have a legal background and will have recently performed a senior role in the secretarial function of a major plc. Experience of acquisitions/disposals and familiarity with the yellow book will be essential.

MANAGEMENT SELECTION

£40,000 + car + benefits

The position calls for a flexible, self motivated team player with the strength of personality to handle the pressures and challenges of rapid growth.

Interested candidates should write enclosing a full CV and daytime telephone number quoting ref 437 to:

Nigel Bates FCA, Whitehead Rice Ltd,
43 Welbeck Street, London W1M 7PG.
Tel: 071-637 8736.

Whitehead Rice

MAPLES and CALDER
FINANCE AND CORPORATE LAWYER
TO US$90,000

We are a leading firm of attorneys-at-law servicing the international financial community from the Cayman Islands. As a result of the major strides made by the Cayman Islands in recent years our client base continues to expand dramatically, and an additional solicitor with first class qualifications and experience is required to advise clients on a demanding mix of international finance, banking, corporate, mutual fund transactions and synthetic security issues.

The ideal applicant will have proven academic ability, City articles, together with up to two years' post qualification experience and will look forward to joining a highly motivated team working on transactions at the highest level. The financial rewards are exceptional and career prospects unique. There is no personal taxation in the Cayman Islands.

Interviews will be held in London in July, 1990.

For further information please write to Anthony Travers, Maples and Calder, P.O. Box 309, Grand Cayman, Cayman Islands, British West Indies.

Telephone: (809)94-92081. Facsimile: (809)94-92329/92755.

CITY - Information Technology - to £50,000
City firm requires a solicitor/barrister at least 4 years' qual. to assist in the development of the I.T. department. Active role in conferences, seminars and contributions to publications is encouraged.

W1 - Private Client - Partner Designate
Medium sized West End firm requires a second partner for the private client department who has substantial experience particularly in personal tax planning and trusts. Likely to be a partner in another firm.

CITY - Employment - 1 to 5 years Qual
Major City firm requires a solicitor between 1 and 5 years' qual. With experience in employment law and preferably at least 1 years' experience in immigration law.

CITY - Banking - to £80,000
Medium sized City firm requires solicitors with 2 to 7 years' post qualification experience in general commercial banking, project finance, MBO/LBO take-over finance, cross border transactions and working capital facilities. Excellent prospects.

CITY - Company/Commercial - Partner
9 Partner City firm requires a senior solicitor to work with 1 other partner in the Co/Commercial department to assist in the dept's development and to handle the quantity of work. Immediate partnership for senior individuals.

Garfield Robbins

Legal Recruitment and Search Consultants, 21 Bloomsbury Way, London WC1A 2TH
Nicholas Robbins or Gavin Crocker on (071) 405 1125 or evenings (071) 538 8391

'Stars of the Bar' wait anxiously

Next week sees the first of the new-style Bar directories with the publication of The Legal 500, where the chief innovation is the section on Chambers and how they rate.

Fortunately for those whose future may depend on such league tables, John Pritchard, the editor, has decided to make a cautious entry into this field. "For this first year, we decided simply to list the Chambers which we would recommend for the main types of work," Mr Pritchard says. "We have not named individual barristers within those Chambers, although we have started keeping notes on them."

This year's Legal 500 represents a marker for the future. The signal has been sent out that barristers are under scrutiny and that their respective merits will be discussed, henceforth, in public.

In preparing his recommendations, Mr Pritchard has drawn on comments and observations from solicitors in England and Wales. On that basis, he has constructed lists of those Chambers which are well regarded in particular areas.

Although the lists highlight the top two or three Chambers in each field (for example, 1 Aikins Building, Gray's Inn and 10 Essex Street in construction), that is as far as the

A new publication lists the best Chambers.

But worried barristers, writes Edward Fennell, have nothing to fear fine discrimination goes. No individual barrister, therefore, will feel particularly hard done by as a result of this exercise — although there may well be disgruntled Chambers who question why they are not mentioned at all.

Next year, however, it will be different. Having whetted the appetite of his readers, Mr Pritchard plans to name names. Twelve months hence, we can expect to see not just the facts and figures, but a clear identification of who are supposed to be the stars of the Bar.

Questioned as to the value of such initiatives, Roger Henderson, of the Bar Council, said: "I am delighted that such information on the Bar and all the advocacy it can provide is going to be available on a better-informed basis than hitherto. It's clearly essential, for example, that those professionals — such as accountants and surveyors — who want direct access to the Bar, need to have this information which, up until now, has been available only on the solicitors' grapevine.

The irony may be, however, that those solicitors who supply Mr Pritchard with his intelligence, may actually be undermining their own position. Because solicitors have traditionally acted as the go-between for client and barrister, they have gained a unique understanding of individual barristers' abilities. That knowledge has become an important part of their expertise. Once they start giving it away, and other professionals become familiar with the arcane mysteries of the Chambers, it may turn out that they have "sold the shop" (or at least that part of it which depends on who you know rather than what you know).

Already, for example, The Legal 500 enables the reader to draw fine distinctions between occupants of the same addresses. Thus, although 2, Mitre Court Buildings, Temple, comes out well in the Planning section, the Chambers of William Glover, QC, score higher than Sir Frank Layfield, QC. And when we are told next year exactly who in William Glover's set we ought to consult, there should be no surprise when accountants and surveyors go off and do so without troubling their solicitors for this service.

So, as the muted war among lawyers continues, the publication of information is likely to play an increasingly important role. The contraction of the Bar may be inevitable, but in the process the more able barristers will have their position strengthened and their profile raised. The only thing standing in their way is the chaotic administration of many Chambers. Mr Pritchard's enquiries ran into difficulties because some Chambers are pitifully disorganised. If they are going to capitalise on this opportunity for publicity, then barristers' clerks need to smarten up their act.

INNS AND OUTS

Plans are afoot to establish a European Drugs Law Institute on the lines of the Federal Drug Law Institute in the United States in response to difficulties experts in the pharmaceuticals and healthcare industries — has been to the pharmaceuticals and healthcare industries from Italy, Spain, France, West Germany and the UK. There are hopes the organisation will be functioning by the end of the year.

Dr Brown believes that if the industry is not provided with a forum for discussing how the law can achieve the free movement of healthcare products, the European Commission will impose what it believes to be a consensus, even when none exists. Nor do the legal problems end here. "If you take a directive and look at the member state translations, they are all different," he comments. In a highly regulated industry such as food and drugs this could give rise to some significant discrepancies in the way directives are interpreted. Lawyers involved in the initiative, which include Stephen Kon, of S. J. Berwin, Ian Dodds-Smith, of McKennas, and barrister Conor Quigley of 12 Gray's Inn Square have indicated that the issues are broad and range from product liability (a particular UK concern), to competition (a worry for the Spanish). As for lawyers, Dr Brown sees their role developing akin to the US model where administrative law challenges to government decisions are far more common than in Europe at present.

Concern at the high levels of default on post-divorce and separation maintenance payments has led to the suggestion that the maintenance scheme introduced in Australia two years ago would be a good model for the UK. Under the scheme, "child support" supercedes maintenance and is calculated by reference to a formula. It is then automatically collected from the wages or salary of non-custodial parents, paid to the government in the same way as PAYE income tax and then paid to custodial parents through the Department of Social Security. So far the scheme has resulted in Social Security savings of about A$8 million (£3.6 million) and has improved the rate of compliance with court orders from 30 per cent to 70 per cent.

Have you noticed a certain smoothness about Stephenson Harwood's partners recently? One reason may be traced to the activities of the head of the firm's Intellectual Property Group, Ludi Lochner, who claims to be the first partner named as a co-inventor in a US patent. Mr Lochner acted for Remington, which markets depilators, in the company's complex legal battle with the Israeli inventor of the first such device. Within the first 18 months, this product achieved sales of $360 million. When Remington launched a rival product, the Israeli sued for infringement of patent, a claim that was dismissed. Remington was then offered a licence under a patent for another depilator, but Mr Lochner advised that not only could the patent be avoided but improved. Remington applied to the US Patent Office. The application was granted and named Remington's design engineer and Mr Lochner, who holds a science degree, as co-inventors.

Yet another legal magazine landed on desks this week, but this time with no journalists writing for it. Practical Law for Companies is essentially what it says — a series of articles on some of the arcane subjects such as "earn outs" and "garden leave" which company lawyers need to know about these days. PLC is produced by Robert Dow and Christopher Millerchip, two former assistant solicitors from Slaughter & May. They have also coaxed former partner Richard Youard out of semi-retirement as the investment referee, to become consultant editor to the magazine and former partner Clive Rumbelow out of full retirement to write a piece on "paying directors a little more after the Guinness remuneration case".

SCRIVENER

Cinderella status: Anthony Butcher, QC, Official Referee

Most people have never heard of the Official Referees. Even lawyers are hazy about their precise function. Yet there are six of them. They are 116 years old. And despite being officially abolished in 1971, they continue to survive.

Born out of the frustration of Victorian businessmen who shunned long-winded formal court proceedings in favour of arbitration (particularly in construction work), the wheel appears to have come full circle (writes Max Findlay).

Julian Holloway, a lawyer at McKenna's, commented last year: "The delays in the Official Referees' courts can be extensive and a major problem. At present, a fixed date for a four-year trial is unlikely before 1992."

Professional concern is now mainly focused on the ambivalent ranking of these specialist circuit judges. "It is irking that Official Referee work is still in a Cinderella position as far as status is concerned," says Anthony Butcher, QC, a deputy Official Referee and chairman of the Official Referees' Bar Association. He adds that foreign industrial or commercial concerns "are not impressed that their case is not being presided over

Referees appeal over the 'unfair' penalties

Official Referees, the specialist circuit judges, want more status and more pecuniary reward by a High Court judge". It is a view shared by Robert Oakes, from Taylor Joynson Garrett, who says he would like to see Official Referees elevated to the High Court bench because "it would upgrade the attitude in the profession towards the practice of construction law generally".

He believes they "do a remarkably good job" and that "there is a genuine attempt by the court civil servants and the judges to fit in with the requirements and needs of the lawyers and their clients".

The decision-making is at a high level. In their submissions to the Top Salaries Review Body, the London Official Referees state: "So important is our jurisdiction that many appeals from our decisions have been made to the Court of Appeal and some to the House of Lords. In the majority of cases we have been upheld."

According to Mr Butcher, one crucial area which has been developed by Official Referees "over the past 12 to 15 years has been the enormous increase in professional negligence and local authority misfeasance actions".

These are often cases "involving building owners suing several defendants saying that the building was not as good as it should be or that the designer or architect got it wrong".

So much for the plaudits. But there are weaknesses, too. Rarely (if ever) are Official Referees drawn from mainstream building law practices. Mr Justice Garland is singled out as the one construction expert on the bench and he became a High Court judge instead.

Recruitment is also a severe problem. Mr Butcher explains: "If you take the average age of the past four appointments as Official Referee, you will arrive at the conclusion that this is not a job after which people are screaming."

It is a point firmly addressed by the London Official Referees themselves.

In their submissions to the Top Salaries Review Body they say: "It is really out of the question to expect silks in their late forties or fifties to give up highly lucrative practices for a salary many times less than their earnings."

The memorandum continues: "The possible appointees whose appointment we would welcome are among the ablest members of the Bar. Unfortunately, they are not attracted."

The message is that if the Lord Chancellor is clearly in a reforming mind, he ought to turn it into a job worth fighting for. Given the importance and extent of their work load, he could also increase their numbers.

● The author is a legal journalist

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS

Bank Lawyer

Major UK Merchant Bank

Up to £50,000 + Bonus + Benefits

City

Outstanding opportunity for high calibre specialist Lawyer to practice at the core of this bank's activities. Excellent career progression.

THE COMPANY

- Leading UK merchant bank. Top ten league table position in corporate finance and asset management.
- International organisation well placed to continue its growth in the UK and worldwide.
- Established legal team interacting with all business areas of the bank.

THE POSITION

- High degree of professional autonomy advising wholesale banking, corporate finance, asset management and central management at middle and senior levels.
- Critical involvement in domestic and international litigation, in co-operation with outside advisers.

QUALIFICATIONS

- Solicitor, with at least five years post qualification experience, in banking and company law, in private practice or in a financial institution.
- Technical excellence. Experience of international transactions. Some knowledge of Yellow Book, Takeover Code and City regulations.
- Resolute and confident personality, with the standing to advise demanding and expert clientele.

Please reply in writing, enclosing full cv, Reference J205
54 Jermyn Street, London, SW1Y 6LK

SEARCH & SELECTION

LONDON • 071-493 6392
BIRMINGHAM • 021-225 4656 • MANCHESTER • 0625 539953 • GLASGOW • 041-204 4334
SLOUGH • 0753 694844 • HONG KONG • (86) 5 217133

Norton Rose

Commercial Tax Lawyers

We wish to recruit two commercial tax lawyers to join our expanding Taxation Department.

Our practice is extensive and has a strong international emphasis. Successful applicants will join a team of specialists advising on the taxation aspects of a wide range of work, including banking, securities, asset finance, energy and property development.

Applicants should have at least two years' qualified experience, together with a proven ability to combine commercial understanding with a detailed knowledge of tax legislation, case law and Inland Revenue practice.

We offer a competitive salary and benefits package, together with a structured training programme and career development opportunities within a stimulating and friendly environment.

Applications should be sent, with full C.V. to:

Gillian Smith, Personnel Manager
Norton Rose, Kempton House, Camomile Street, London EC3A 7AN

Norton Rose has offices in London, Hong Kong, Bahrain, Singapore, Brussels, Paris and is a member of the Norton Rose M5 Group of independent legal practices

Legal Resources is a division of Reliance Resources Limited, a long established and highly respected human resource company.

Legal Resources specialises in the nationwide recruitment of permanent and locum legal staff.

We provide

- private practice
- local authorities
- the industrial and commercial sectors with a positive combination of professional recruitment skills, legal expertise and a high level of dedicated service.

Amanda Prince BA
Legal Resources
53 Doughty Street
London WC1N 2LS
Tel: 071-405 4985
Fax: 071-242 0208

COURT BY THE TIDE

Major shipping practice is on the lookout for first rate experienced crews (captains, ratings and whole ships' complements) to strengthen the follow-ups as they sail into the 1990's. Wake following very welcome. Salaries and remuneration will be commensurate with the quality of candidates experienced.

Please telephone Mrs Pamela Handford 071-583-2382 WEST EIGHT LEGAL

LEGAL ASSISTANT

c £25,000 plus car

Our client, a long-established finance house based in North-West London and employing over 400 people, is principally engaged in consumer and business instalment credit and leasing. It is part of a large and successful public group involved in the financial services and media industries.

The Company Secretary and Head of Legal Department now seeks a young lawyer to assist him with all legal matters arising within the department. Among the chief matters you will be handling are consumer credit law, the development of new forms of agreement, commercial contract work, insolvency matters, and varied company secretarial duties.

You will be in direct contact with a wide range of people, both within the company and outside, such as business clients, external solicitors, government departments, and members of the relevant trade associations.

The ideal candidate will be a newly or recently qualified lawyer, keen to gain experience in the field of financial services. You will have had a commercially-based training or some experience in the finance industry, but all applicants will be considered on their merits. Knowledge of the matters listed above is not essential as excellent training will be given.

For further details please ring Sonya Rayner, or send her a copy of your cv.

Chambers

Recruitment

74 Long Lane, London EC1A 9ET
Telex: 8951182 (071) 606 9371 Fax: (071) 600 1793

Consultants

LEGAL ADVISOR

Salary c. £25K-£30K + car + benefits Reading Based

THORN EMI UK RENTAL LIMITED is one of the largest rental organisations in the UK providing domestic appliance rental services to over 2.5 million customers throughout the country. The Company has recently undergone major reorganisation and has established its head office at a new location near Reading, just off junction 12 of the M4.

We need a Legal Advisor. This role presents an excellent career challenge for a young ambitious Solicitor or Barrister.

Assisting our Head of Legal and Secretariat Department, you will provide a comprehensive legal service to our rental Companies, including advice on a wide range of matters with particular emphasis on consumer credit, commercial and contract law.

It is expected you will have 2-3 years post qualification experience (preferably gained in industry), be keen to take responsibility and able to operate at senior levels within the Companies providing practical advice.

The rewards are excellent including a Company Car, BUPA, Pension Scheme and relocation assistance where appropriate.

Please apply in writing, enclosing a comprehensive CV, to Karen Carter, THORN EMI UK RENTAL LIMITED, The Park Centre, Arlington Business Park, Theale, Reading, Berkshire RG7 4SA.

THORN EMI UK RENTAL LIMITED

The best aid money can buy

The £650 million legal aid scheme must give value for taxpayers' money, writes Lord Mackay of Clashfern

The evolution of the present legal aid scheme from its foundation in 1949 to its present crucial role in our adversarial system reflects sustained efforts made by successive governments and the legal profession.

The government's commitment continues to be clear: spending has increased five-fold during the past 10 years; recent major legislation has created a firm new base for efficient administration; a wide-ranging review of financial conditions for eligibility is under way.

Some £650 million will be paid to barristers and solicitors in this financial year for legal services under the legal aid scheme. Undoubtedly the scheme could be wider in scope. But if the scheme were to be widened, surely the public, who pay for it, have to be assured it is obtaining the best value for its payment and that aid goes to those who need it.

The government has embarked on a programme of changes aimed at preserving and improving the services given. A consistent theme of the programme is, as I have indicated, value for money, and I emphasise value. The key to access to justice in this country, I believe, is the recognition and appreciation of the need to make the best use of legal aid resources. It is common sense that if you use resources in the most efficient way you can spread them further.

Legal aid is a joint venture to which the government and the profession contribute. The professions provide legal services; the government meets the difference between what the proceedings should cost and what those given help can afford. The taxpayer funds the difference. Some critics appear to forget this, as they categorise the programme in hand as one of cuts and reductions in quality, rather than one of working positively to ensure the taxpayer's burden is worthwhile.

Getting value for the taxpayer's money has four elements: first, eliminating needless cost; nobody involved in legal proceedings, whether legally aided or not, should have to pay more for services than they are worth.

My predecessor Lord Hailsham set in motion the Civil Justice Review, a thorough examination by a working party of distinguished lawyers, judges, academics and consumer representatives of the way the civil legal process works. It concluded that delay, cost and complexity could be substantially reduced by reallocating business to different levels of court, by reforming the procedure carried out by the parties, their lawyers and by courts for handling cases, and by better management of court resources.

Part one of the Courts and Legal Services Bill, now finishing its committee stage in the Commons, with other measures, should ensure cases are heard at the right level of court and that court processes, such as issuing summonses and getting the cases to trial are speeded up and simplified. In the course of proceedings in Parliament leading to the Children Act, I announced a rolling programme for reforming family law, jurisdiction and procedures. One of the most controversial areas is likely to be that of divorce law, and I await the Law Commission's final report with great interest.

It does seem to me that at the very time couples may be most in need of funds if they reach the decision that their marriage is beyond help, they may also find themselves involved in their first experience of family law — and that can be an expensive experience. It must be considered whether there is scope for alternative help and advice for such couples, particularly if such help is to be publicly funded.

Second, ensuring the scheme covers those who may need help — last November, I announced changes to legal aid eligibility to improve access to justice for children under 16, pensioners and people involved in personal injury cases. These changes, which came into effect on April 9, were the first results of a review by my department into the financial conditions for legal aid.

The review is closely linked with the changes in hand to law, jurisdiction and procedure. We have started with financial conditions for legal aid in civil proceedings. The review will take two to three years, and I have stated that changes will be brought into effect as agreed, rather than awaiting completion of the full review.

The review addresses questions far wider than the percentage of the population eligible for legal aid. As well as examining the position of those not now eligible for legal aid, it extends to the contributions paid by those who are assisted, the way their means are assessed, and the effect of legal aid on unassisted opponents. It will explore the extent to which insurance or other arrangements could provide effective cover. In Australia, for example, there are special arrangements with banks by which litigants can fund legal proceedings.

Third, effective administration of the scheme: the Legal Aid Board and the creation of the Legal Aid Fund have provided a firm foundation for improvement. There is little point in providing a scheme if the delays are so long that people are either discouraged from or simply cannot take advantage of it.

Fourth, a framework for legal services which can respond to changing demands — the Courts and Legal Services Bill provides this. Within this framework, legal services of the right quality can be developed to meet the varying needs of litigants, doing away with any unnecessary restrictions on the functions of the many professional strands.

● The author is the Lord Chancellor

Not a blank cheque: legal services need to respond to changing demands

Law Report June 19 1990 House of Lords

Third party cannot sue club where insolvent member did not observe clause

Firma C-Trade SA v Newcastle Protection and Indemnity Association
Socony Mobil Oil Inc and Others v West of England Ship Owners Mutual Insurance Association (London) Ltd

Before Lord Keith of Kinkaid, Lord Brandon of Oakbrook, Lord Ackner, Lord Goff of Chieveley and Lord Jauncey of Tullichettle

[Speeches June 14]

The Third Parties (Rights against Insurers) Act 1930 did not confer upon a third party who had a claim against an insolvent member of a ship-owners' Protection and Indemnity Association (P & I Club) a right to proceed directly against the P & I Club if the club's rules contained a "pay to be paid" clause (providing that members' liabilities would be indemnified only where the member had itself discharged the liability first) which had not been complied with by the insolvent member.

The House of Lords so held in allowing appeals by P & I Clubs against a decision of the Court of Appeal (Lord Justice O'Connor, Lord Justice Bingham and Lord Justice Stuart-Smith) determining two separate cases in favour of third party claimants (The Times December 27, 1988; [1989] 1 Lloyd's Rep 239).

In the first case Mr Justice Staughton, at first instance, had allowed a claim by Firma C-Trade SA against Newcastle Protection and Indemnity Association (1987) 2 Lloyd's Rep 299.

In the second case Mr Justice Saville, at first instance, had found in favour of the West of England Ship Owners Mutual Insurance Association (London) Ltd and dismissed a claim by Socony Mobil Oil Inc (1987) 2 Lloyd's Rep 529.

Section 1 of the 1930 Act provides: "(1) Where under any contract of insurance a person... is insured against liabilities to third parties which he may incur, then, if he is or becomes insolvent, the insured being a company, in the event of a winding-up order being made... if either before or after that event, any such liability as aforesaid is incurred by the insured, his rights against the insurer under the contract in respect of the liability shall notwithstanding anything in any Act or rule of law to the contrary, be transferred to and vest in the third party to whom the liability was so incurred... of insurance made after the commencement of this Act in respect of any liability of the insured to third parties purposes, whether directly or indirectly, to avoid the contract or to alter the rights of the parties thereunder upon the happening to the insured of one of the events specified... the contract shall be of no effect."

(4) Upon a transfer under subsection (1) of this section, the insurer shall... be under the same liability to the third party as he would have been under to the insured..."

Mr Richard Aikens, QC and Mr Jonathan Hirst, QC, for the Newcastle Association; Mr Anthony Clarke, QC and Mr Nicholas Hamblen for Firma C-Trade; Mr Stewart Boyd, QC and Mr Graham Dunning for the West of England Association; Mr Jonathan Sumption, QC and Mr Andrew Poplewell for Socony Mobil Oil.

LORD BRANDON said that it was not in dispute that the "pay to be paid" provisions in the rules of the two clubs were terms of the contracts of insurance made between the members and the clubs. That being so, it was necessary, in order to determine the appeals, to pose, and answer three questions.

First, immediately before the members were ordered to be wound up, what rights, if any, did the members have against the clubs under their contracts of insurance in respect of the liabilities which the members had previously incurred to the third parties?

Second, did the "pay to be paid" provisions, being terms of the contracts of insurance, require the members to pay to the clubs, pursuant to, or to alter the rights of the parties under them, upon the members being ordered to be wound up, so as to render those provisions to that extent of no effect under section 1(3) of the 1930 Act?

Third, having regard to the answers to the first and second questions, what rights against the clubs, if any, were conferred from the members to the third parties upon the members being ordered to be wound up? In the result, his Lordship would answer the first question by saying that immediately before the members were ordered to be wound up they had only contingent rights against the clubs in respect of the liabilities to third parties incurred by them. The rights were contin-gent in that it was a condition precedent to the members being indemnified by the clubs in respect of those liabilities that they should first have been discharged by the members themselves.

With regard to the second question there were substantial difficulties in the way of the third parties' contention that section 1(3) of the Act rendered the "pay to be paid" provisions in the clubs' rules of no effect.

The provisions applied throughout the lives of the contracts of insurance made between the members and the clubs, imposing a condition necessary to be fulfilled before any liability of the clubs to indemnify the members could arise. They were not provisions which, applied upon the happening of a specified event such as an order for the winding up of a member, they applied equally before and after such an event.

It was no doubt true that, upon any member being ordered to be wound up because of insolvency, that member would be likely to be prevented from discharging any liability to a third party which he had incurred and so be unable to obtain an indemnity from his club in respect of it.

That situation, however, did not result directly or indirectly, from any alteration of the member's rights under his contract of insurance. It resulted rather from the member's inability, by reason of insolvency, to exercise those rights.

The second question would, therefore, be answered by saying that the "pay to be paid" provisions, being terms of the contracts of insurance made between the members and the clubs, did not purport, either directly or indirectly, to avoid those contracts, or to alter the rights of the parties under them, upon the members being ordered to be wound up, so as to render those provisions to that extent of no effect under section 1(3) of the Act.

With regard to the third question, there were two views as to what rights against the clubs, if any, were transferred from the members to the third parties upon the members being ordered to be wound up.

The first view was that the third parties had transferred to them rights to be indemnified by the clubs, subject to a condition precedent that the third parties first paid to themselves the amounts of the liabilities to them which had been incurred by the members; that such a condition precedent was impossible for the third parties to satisfy because a person could not pay money to himself, and that it therefore became ineffective or inapplicable; and that, in the result, the rights transferred to and vested in the third parties were accrued rights to be indemnified by the clubs.

The second view was that members admittedly had no accrued rights to be indemnified by the clubs, because they had not satisfied the condition precedent of discharging the liabilities to the third parties themselves; the third parties could not, as a result of the statutory transfer of rights, have transferred to them any better or larger rights against the clubs than those which the members had previously possessed; in the result, therefore, the parties did not have transferred to them any accrued rights to be indemnified by the clubs.

His Lordship had no doubt that the second view was to be preferred to the first. It was abundantly clear from the express terms of the Act that the legislature never intended, except as provided in section 1(3) which did not apply to the "pay to be paid" provisions in the clubs' rules, to put a third party in any better position as against an insurer than that of the insured himself.

The effect of section 1(1) and section 1(4) was that, in a case where the insurer would have had a good defence to a claim made by the insured before the statutory transfer of his rights to the third party, the insurer would have precisely the same good defence to a claim made by the third party after such transfer.

In the two instant cases it was not in doubt that the clubs would have had good defences to any claims to an indemnity made by the members before they were ordered to be wound up, on the ground that the condition precedent to their rights to such indemnity, namely, the prior discharge by the members of their liabilities to the third parties had not been satisfied. It had to follow that the clubs had the same good defences to claims for an indemnity made by the third parties after the members were ordered to be wound up.

Lord Goff and Lord Jauncey delivered concurring speeches and Lord Keith and Lord Ackner agreed.

Solicitors: Ince & Co; Clyde & Co; Holman Fenwick & Willan; Allen & Overy.

Commercial rate interest runs from assessment of damages

Lindop v Goodwin Steel Castings Ltd

Before Mr Justice Turner

[Judgment May 21]

Where judgment as to liability had been entered against a defendant, interest under section 17 of the Judgments Act 1838 at the commercial rate was recoverable only after the damages had been assessed.

Mr Justice Turner so held in a reserved judgment in the Queen's Bench Division (delivered at the Central Criminal Court) in a personal injury action concerning quantum, liability having been agreed by consent before Mr Justice Pain on December 18, 1984 at 75 per cent of the full damages.

Section 17 of the 1838 Act, as amended by the Judgment Debts (Rate of Interest) Order (SI 1985 No 437), provides: "... Every judgment debt shall carry interest at the rate of 15 per cent per annum from the time of entering up the judgment... until the same shall be satisfied."

Mr Anthony Barker, QC and Mr Stephen Oliver-Jones for the plaintiff; Mr William Barnett, QC and Mr Peter Bowers for the defendants.

MR JUSTICE TURNER said that on June 2, 1982 the plaintiff was injured in the course of his work. On December 18, 1984 by consent it was directed by Mr Justice Pain that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment of 75 per cent.

Before his Lordship two principal issues had been litigated, the first being the sum in respect of which the plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages.

The second was the vexed question whether the plaintiff was entitled to interest on the judgment so entered under section 17 of the Judgments Act 1838 or under the provisions of section 3 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1934, as re-enacted in the Administration of Justice Act 1982.

In recent months there had been a number of cases where, directly or indirectly, the court had been called upon to adjudicate on the question whether a plaintiff was entitled to interest on the judgment sum as a judgment debt pursuant to section 17 of the 1838 Act where judgment had been entered against a defendant by default or otherwise (the liability judgment) but with damages to be assessed, or whether interest on such judgment could only be recovered under the 1838 Act after damages had been assessed (the damages judgment).

If the entitlement to judgment debt interest arose from the moment at which the liability judgment was entered then three considerations arose.

1 That interest had to be applied to the figure awarded for general damages which had been assessed in current money as at the date of the making of the award of damages. The consequence was that such part of the award which had been enriched by the inflationary element of the commercial rate of interest then qualified for the further award of commercial rate interest.

2 That interest would be applied to such part of the special damages which had accrued between the date of the liability judgment and the damages judgment although ex hypothesi the plaintiff had no entitlement to such sums as at the date of that judgment. Moreover, since special damages accruing between the dates of the liability judgment and damages judgment fell to be assessed in current monetary values from year to year or month to month, the same point as above arose in regard to the inflationary element contained within the commercial rate of interest.

3 That interest would be applied to so much of the award of damages which was represented by future loss, when that future loss would be assessed in monetary values current at the date of the damages judgment.

It was manifest from those considerations that a defendant who allowed a liability judgment to be entered against him, or became subject to such a judgment, stood to be subjected to an injustice which was not counterbalanced by any injustice to claimants if they were properly to be held not entitled to commercial rate interest as from the date of the liability judgment.

For the plaintiff to be entitled to succeed in the present case the words "judgment debt" in section 17 of the 1838 Act had to be construed so as to mean "liability judgment" and the "time of entering up the judgment" referred to the liability judgment rather than the damages judgment.

Given that there were two judgments, as would be the result in any case in which liability and damages were separately determined, the relevant "judgment" had to be that which created the judgment debt and not that which established or decreed that there was a liability.

Such a construction of section 17 led to a logical and sensible result, quite apart from conforming to the plain language of the section. There was not and could not have been any judgment debt created by the judgment of Mr Justice Pain in the present case.

Solicitors: Tinsdills, Stoke-on-Trent; Grindleys, Stoke-on-Trent.

Auctioneers liable for false description

Derbyshire County Council v Vincent

Auctioneers were not exempt from the provisions of section 1(1)(a) of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 which made it an offence for any person in the course of a trade or business to apply a false trade description to any goods.

The Queen's Bench Divisional Court (Lord Justice Farquhar so held on June 11 in allowing an appeal by way of case stated by Derbyshire County Council against the acquittal by Ashbourne Justices of Thomas William Duncan Vincent of an offence contrary to section 1(1)(a) of the 1968 Act.

MR JUSTICE ALLIOTT said that Aitchison, Smith and Others (1974 SLT 282) was a persuasive authority for the proposition that section 1(1)(a), applied to auctioneers.

There was nothing in the legislation to suggest that auctioneers were exempt from the provisions of section 1(1)(a) and they were in fact bound by the subsection.

PRODDOW, MACKAY & PARKES

THE CLOISTERS
MARLOW ROAD
MAIDENHEAD
BERKS SL6 7XW
TEL: (0628) 777844

We are currently seeking three experienced solicitors/legal executives in the Company, Commercial and Family fields to assist in our continued expansion in the Thames Valley area.

A proven and practical approach to the law together with a positive ability to win and develop new business is essential.

These are highly responsible positions and excellent prospects exist for the right candidates.

Please apply in writing together with your C.V. to Mrs. Jean Hickman, Proddow Mackay & Parkes, The Cloisters, Marlow Road, Maidenhead, Berks. SL6 7XW.

WH SMITH

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS

GROUP LEGAL ADVISER

W H Smith, the retail and distribution group, includes the well-known high street stores of W H Smith, Waterstone's, Our Price Music, W H Smith Travel and Paperchase. In addition, the Group also has interests in Do-It-All, the wholesale distribution of printed matter and commercial stationery and in the Screensport and Lifestyle television channels.

A legal adviser is sought. The role will involve liaising closely with Directors and the Company Secretary as well as advising senior management in the operating subsidiaries.

Based at the International Head Office in London, the successful applicant is likely to have a minimum of 3 years' experience gained in either industry or private practice. Advising on the full range of the Group's commercial and corporate activities as well as monitoring a diverse range of litigation, the incumbent will be expected to liaise closely and effectively with the Group's external legal advisers.

In addition to a highly competitive salary and benefits package including a fully-expensed car, non-contributory pension and health care, the position offers a unique opportunity to build and develop the legal department of a prestigious and highly successful company.

For further information please contact Jonathan Macrae on 071-405 6062 (081-672 8340 evenings/weekends) or write to him at Quarry Dougall Recruitment, 9 Brownlow Street, London WC1V 6JD.

QD
QUARRY DOUGALL

PRODDOW, MACKAY & PARKES

THE CLOISTERS
MARLOW ROAD
MAIDENHEAD
BERKS SL6 7XW
TEL: (0628) 777844

We are currently seeking three experienced solicitors/legal executives in the Company, Commercial and Family fields to assist in our continued expansion in the Thames Valley area.

A proven and practical approach to the law together with a positive ability to win and develop new business is essential.

These are highly responsible positions and excellent prospects exist for the right candidates.

Please apply in writing together with your C.V. to Mrs. Jean Hickman, Proddow Mackay & Parkes, The Cloisters, Marlow Road, Maidenhead, Berks. SL6 7XW.

"Holborn Practitioner" specialising in commercial work requires an Assistant newly or recently qualified to deal with commercial/domestic property and other non-contentious work. The vacancy is in a small practice, where a successful applicant will have every opportunity to expand and develop.

Salary: Completely negotiable. Please write to: Lewis Moore at Craven House, 121 Kingsway, London WC2B 6PA enclosing C.V.

Solicitors W2 require first class experienced to run Accounts Department. Computerised System (Sollidger). Knowledge of Novell Network an advantage. Ability to prepare accounts to TB essential. This is an interesting and varied position in a 3 Partner firm with wide range of client work.

LEGAL ACCOUNTANT

Hours 9.30 - 5.30. Hols 4 weeks p.a. Salary by negotiation a.a.e. Phone: 071 243 1551

CONSTRUCTION LITIGATION c.

2 yrs PQE for first rate London practice. ESAC. Contact Law Personnel 071-242-1281

CONVEYANCING, with some advocacy. Commercial solicitors need with up to 4 yrs PQE. Will ideally suit someone driving locally. ESAC prospects. Contact Law Personnel 071-242-1281 (24hrs).

EMPLOYMENT LAW. Major City practice requires solicitor with pre up to 4 years experience. To c 242-000. 071 353 7005 Meredith Scott Assoc. Adv.

ENTERTAINMENT. High profile City practice needs solicitor with 2/3 yrs PQE in media matters. Every Attraction. Contact Law Personnel 071-242-1281 (24hrs).

PARTNERS for major prestigious

West End practice, with following, in the areas of commercial, entertainment, trust & probate. Niche acquisitions and mergers very welcome. Please telephone Mrs. Pamela Harcourt 071-543-2362, West End Legal.

PLYMOUTH LITIGATION. Prestigious practice requires sol. pref. up to 2 years admitted & comm. 071 353 7005 Meredith Scott Assoc. Adv.

Continued on next page

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS

BURGES SALMON

NON-CONTENTIOUS
INSOLVENCY
BRISTOL

Our Client, Burges Salmon, a leading and progressive Bristol law firm and member of the Norton Rose M5 Group, continues to enjoy growth in all areas of its practice.

It now seeks a solicitor to join its thriving Insolvency and Banking Team, whose work embraces a challenging range of non-contentious insolvency matters involving assisting administrative receivers in continuing to trade and with asset disposals, close liaison with liquidators and advice on administrations. There is also the opportunity to diversify into banking and company/commercial work, if desired.

Ideally, candidates will have a strong academic record and up to three years' relevant experience gained with a major Provincial or Central London firm. Previous insolvency experience is not essential, although a genuine interest in this field and previous experience of quality commercial work is important.

In addition to the excellent quality of life to be found in the West Country, the firm can offer a highly competitive package and excellent prospects.

For further information, please contact Adrian Fox on 071-405 6062 (071-625 9417 evenings/weekends) or write to him at Quarry Dougall Recruitment, 9 Brownlow Street, London WC1V 6JD.

QD
QUARRY DOUGALL

UNITED KINGDOM · HONG KONG · NEW ZEALAND · AUSTRALIA

PREMEDITATED OR PROVOKED?

It's your decision

It is a nasty affair - one man lies unconscious with two broken ribs and a smashed jaw; the other came out of it a bit better. The police want to prosecute the latter for a serious assault; he says he was acting in self defence. The case is yours. Yet, no matter how appalled you are by the injuries, your job is to assess the evidence objectively before deciding whether to prosecute.

Criminal Advocacy is widely held to be one of the most exhilarating and demanding sides of the legal profession, and working for the CPS will make huge demands on your judgement, experience and maturity. However, it is also an extremely supportive environment, with excellent training and there is always an experienced colleague to turn to.

We are looking for solicitors and barristers who want a genuine challenge, or experienced lawyers looking for a fresh lease of life. Whether you are currently in private practice, or the public sector, we would like to hear from you. The CPS also offers a sponsored pupillage and articulated clerk scheme and retraining in advocacy skills and criminal law for Lawyers returning to work or seeking a career change within the legal profession.

The national structure of the CPS means that vacancies may be available throughout England and Wales. We are particularly keen to recruit in London and the Home Counties, Cambridge/Lincolnshire, Derbyshire and the Midlands. Starting salaries will depend on experience and location, and range between £17,545 and £29,220 in Central London. Slightly lower rates apply in suburban and provincial locations. (Pay award pending). Articled Clerks and Pupil Barristers salaries range between £9,922 and £13,717.

For further details on working for the CPS, please contact our Recruitment Team on (071) 273 8172, or write to the Recruitment Team, The Crown Prosecution Service, 4-12 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AZ.

The Civil Service is an equal opportunity employer

THE CROWN PROSECUTION SERVICE

Legal Adviser

Over the past 25 years our client has gone from strength to strength in the pharmaceutical sector and is now recognised as a significant force in the industry. With its record of outstanding growth during the past decade, it is now truly international in size and reputation and has become a world leader in its chosen areas. With more than 7,000 employees in 25 countries around the world and more than 80 percent of its business being generated from overseas this organisation is certainly worldwide.

As legal adviser within this expanding, high-profile team based in the worldwide Divisional Headquarters in the East Midlands, you will be primarily responsible for the drafting and negotiation of agreements and the provision of legal advice to Management including UK, EEC and international competition law.

Candidates are likely to have 3-5 years company/commercial experience, some of which should preferably have been gained in industry. Good communication skills, precision and assertiveness are essential, combined with good business sense and a willingness to work within a team.

In addition to an attractive salary, there is also an excellent range of benefits which you would associate with a large and successful organisation.

Contact Karen Gill on 071-430 1711 (or 081-682 0416 evenings)
Graham Gill & Young, 44-46 Kingsway, London WC2

GRAHAM GILL & YOUNG
LEGAL RECRUITMENT CONSULTANTS

COMMERCIAL LAWYER
GUERNSEY

We are looking for a Solicitor with wide commercial experience and in particular with substantial experience in all aspects of the setting up of offshore funds. Given the right degree of experience, preference would be given to a person who has Guernsey residential qualifications. Salary and other benefits and the possibility of partnership will depend exclusively on the successful applicant's age and experience.

Please write, enclosing CV and current salary or partnership details to the Managing Partner, Ozzanne van Leuven Perrot & Evans, Advocates, P.O. 186, St. Peter Port, Guernsey.

COMMERCE

Commercial to £38,000
Our client, a highly successful and dynamic British company is seeking a company lawyer with up to three years relevant experience to advise on a variety of legal and commercial matters. Located in the Thames Valley area, the position will involve drafting and negotiating a range of commercial agreements, including joint ventures, collaborations, consortia and agency/distribution agreements. The salary and benefits are generous, including a car, and there will be some travel both in the U.K. and abroad.

PRIVATE PRACTICE
Property to £35,000
Our client, a leading City firm seeks a commercial property solicitor with up to three years relevant experience. Advising developers and institutions there is considerable scope to become involved in a variety of high value transactions. The career prospects are excellent for the individual who can meet the challenge of this stimulating and demanding position.

For an informal talk in confidence, please telephone Clive Henderson on 071-236 7307 or write to him at 20 Cousin Lane, London EC4R 3TE. Fax 071-489 1130.

WILSON STEPHENS
RECRUITMENT SPECIALISTS FOR THE LEGAL PROFESSION

COMMERCIAL CHAMBERS AT 3 GRAY'S INN PLACE
REQUIRE A PRACTICE MANAGER
TO JOIN AN EXISTING TEAM

The successful candidate will work under the senior practice manager but will be part of the team looking after a large, busy set of commercial chambers.

Salary depending on age and experience.
Apply with c.v. to Roger Merry-Price at 3 Gray's Inn Place, London WC1R 5EA.

SOUTH WEST

Newly and recently admitted solicitors urgently sought for numerous client firms throughout the South West.

Our service is strictly confidential and without charge to applicants.

Contact the West Country specialists:
LEGAL APPOINTMENTS LTD
8 North Street, Taunton
Somerset TA1 1LH
Tel: 0822-294248

LIBRARIAN

CHARTERED LIBRARIAN WITH LEGAL EXPERIENCE TO JOIN FAST
EXPANDING LAW FIRM

City Salary neg c £18k + benefits

Our clients are a medium sized City law firm who are rapidly expanding. To support this growth they wish to appoint an enthusiastic Librarian to run and further develop their existing library facility.

Reporting to the Manager of Information Services you will have responsibility for the library side of the information services particularly relating to book and periodical stocks, selecting, ordering and circulation. Additionally you will be involved in specific enquiry work.

The successful candidate will be a Chartered Librarian in their mid to late 20's with 3-5 years' experience of working in a legal environment preferably using a computerised library management system. Equally important he or she will be self-motivated, hard working and pro-active and understand the importance of their role in supporting fee earning staff.

The salary will be negotiable according to experience and will be coupled with an excellent benefits package.

Please initially send your C.V., quoting reference 1844 to the Confidential Reply Service Manager, Publicity Management Recruitment Limited, 39-41 Gray's Inn Road, London WC1X 8PP.

Please list separately any firms to which you do not wish your response to be forwarded.
All interviews will be conducted by our client.

CONFIDENTIAL
REPLY SERVICE

PMR

PETROLEUM INDUSTRY
LAWYERS

One of the leading companies in the Petroleum Industry in the Middle East is looking for highly experienced and self-motivated lawyers. The positions are very challenging since they cover all aspects of the Petroleum Industry, from the construction and maintenance of Petroleum to the sales and deliveries of Petroleum products. The jobs require the ability to work with a team of experienced lawyers, and to guide and supervise junior lawyers. Very attractive salaries and benefits are offered.

The candidates should be qualified lawyers (Solicitors or Barristers) and broad commercial and corporate experience in the International Oil & Gas Field would be advantageous. Please send your Curriculum Vitae along with all qualifications and references to:-

MR. T. T. MORGAN
GENERAL PETROLEUM & MINERAL SERVICES (C.I.) LTD.
15 KNIGHTSBRIDGE, LONDON SW1X 7LY

1501 1501

071-481 4481

LEGAL APPOINTMENTS

Continued on next page

SENIOR BANKING LAWYER

An opportunity infrequently offered to play a major role in a leading City firm

Partnership Opportunity

A prominent firm of City solicitors with a prestigious company and corporate finance practice is seeking to recruit a senior banking lawyer to develop further its banking practice. The firm has identified, in particular, as a growth area advising banks, credit corporations and others in relation to asset based financing and related securitisations (including commercial paper) and it is in this area, as well as acquisition and project financing, that the firm now wishes to expand its activities.

The appointed individual will have confidence and flair as well as proven expertise and experience in the fields identified above based on a general background in domestic and international banking transactions. He or she will also be likely to have an established reputation as a banking lawyer and will therefore be of a calibre to command an early partnership at a senior level with significant rewards.

For further information, please contact Anna Ponton on 071-236 8000 or write to her quoting reference B9825.

KPMG

Peat Marwick Selection & Search

70 Fleet Street, London EC4Y 1EU

CHIEF SOLICITOR

Bradford : Package c£35,000

With assets exceeding £3 billion and a nationwide network of branches and agencies, the Yorkshire is one of the country's leading building societies. Operating in the competitive financial services sector, we are developing innovative products and services to maintain our successful performance in an increasingly sophisticated market.

The Legal Department plays a central role in our widening range of business activities. These include estate agency and offshore banking subsidiaries and extensive financial advisory services through branches.

Following the promotion of our Chief Solicitor out of the Legal Department, we are seeking to appoint his successor. This executive post reporting to the Society's General Manager and Secretary, who is also a solicitor, offers the opportunity to provide strategic advice as well as being responsible for developing day-to-day legal services to reflect the changing nature of our business.

In addition to broad experience, you must be able to demonstrate personal qualities enabling you to manage the Society's professionally staffed Legal Department which handles a variety of work including financial services issues, consumer credit and mortgage related areas, acquisitions, contracts, litigation and domestic and commercial conveyancing. Applicants should have some experience in one or more of these areas. Involvement with a financial institution either as in-house or an external lawyer will be an advantage.

The competitive package incorporates an attractive salary, car, concessionary mortgage, private medical cover, contributory pension scheme and relocation assistance where appropriate.

We would like to hear from highly motivated, knowledgeable solicitors who can thrive in the busy, dynamic climate which characterises the rapidly evolving financial services market.

Please write with full c.v. and current salary to: Mr F A Walker MIPM, Personnel Manager, Yorkshire Building Society, Yorkshire House, Westgate, Bradford BD1 2AU.

YORKSHIRE
Building Society

Britain's Key Building Society

LITIGATION - CITY

£28,000 - £45,000

Our Client, a leading City firm with a number of foreign offices, continues to enjoy an enviable reputation in the field of commercial litigation.

Acting for a host of major national and international clients, the firm's Litigation Department handles a variety of substantial commercial disputes in the U.K. and European courts as well as domestic and international arbitrations.

Due to sustained expansion, the Department now seeks two further lawyers with between one and three years' relevant post-qualification experience:

- one to handle general commercial litigation including intellectual property, banking and insolvency disputes;
- the other to deal with a broader range of major contentious matters, often international in nature, arising out of substantial corporate and commercial transactions.

The remuneration package and prospects are excellent.

For further information, please contact Adrian Fox or Gareth Quarry on 071-405 6062 (071-625 9417 evenings/weekends), or write to Quarry Dougall Recruitment, 9 Brownlow Street, London WC1V 6JD.

QD

QUARRY DOUGALL

UNITED KINGDOM • HONG KONG • NEW ZEALAND • AUSTRALIA

Commercial Solicitor

North West

c£26,000

Our client is an international company, well known in the electronics and IT industry. Product quality, efficiency and the successful adaptation of present technologies are vital ingredients in its success.

A recent reorganisation and an increasing workload has resulted in the need to recruit an additional Solicitor or Barrister with up to three years' post-qualification experience.

Your daily workload as a Legal Assistant, reporting to the Manager of the Legal Division, will be varied and challenging, involving the provision of advice to the company on a broad range of legal issues. Specific areas of involvement will include acquisitions and disposals, intellectual property, hardware and software licensing, property work and the drafting and negotiation of commercial contracts, agreements and complex terms and conditions. The work is often of an international nature and some overseas travel will be required.

Technical ability is important, but commitment, enthusiasm and good interpersonal skills, together with a desire to succeed with a career in industry, are essential prerequisites for the role.

The remuneration package is attractive and will reflect the age and experience of the successful candidate.

Interested applicants should contact Katrina Smith LLB on 061-228 0396 or write to her at Michael Page Legal, Clarendon House, 81 Mosley Street, Manchester M2 3LQ, quoting Ref: 11085.

MP

Michael Page Legal

International Recruitment Consultants
London Bristol Birmingham Nottingham
Manchester Leeds Newcastle-upon-Tyne & Worldwide

1 BRICK COURT TEMPLE LONDON E.C.4 SENIOR CLERK

The Chambers of Mr Christopher Clarke Q.C. wish to appoint a new Senior Clerk to succeed Mr R. Burley, who will be retiring in early 1991 after 42 years as Senior Clerk.

1 Brick Court is one of the leading and busiest sets of Commercial Chambers in London. There are 37 members of Chambers (13 Q.C.s and 24 Juniors) whose practices together cover all aspects of commercial law, EEC law, administrative law, defamation and other civil law fields.

From September 1990 Chambers will be based at 15/19 Devereux Court, (opposite the Royal Courts of Justice), where 18 tenants will be housed, together with all clerks and administrative staff. We shall retain our premises at 1 Brick Court and 11 Essex Street and also in Brussels.

The successful candidate will probably be between 40 - 50, will have considerable experience of the legal profession and the talent necessary to fulfil the demanding tasks of both traditional clerking and modern management of Chambers administration. He or she will be expected to take charge of the continuing development of these Chambers in conjunction with the existing strong Clerks' Room and staff.

This appointment is a unique opportunity. The demands will be exceptional. For someone who can fulfil these requirements the remuneration will, accordingly be substantial.

We hope to engage the successful applicant by no later than November 1990 so that he or she can work alongside Mr Burley for some time before he retires.

Please apply in writing to Mr. Christopher Clarke Q.C. at 1 Brick Court, Temple, London EC4Y 9BT, marking the envelope "Private".

TOKYO - JOIN OUR INTERNATIONAL TEAM

Corporate/Commercial Solicitor: 3-6 years UK Qualified
UK £40K-55K + Expatriate Package

In the last two years our firm has doubled in size. With over a thousand staff, our UK and international offices have a reputation for providing a wide range of the highest quality legal services. Our achievements are recognised as impressive by any standards.

This is a key role at our Tokyo office. You must have broad experience, including commercial transactions involving Japanese organisations. A knowledge and/or willingness to develop language skills is essential.

Extensive training with us in London will be given initially, prior to assignment. The posting is likely to be for 2-3 years, with significant opportunities in London following the assignment.

We will offer successful candidates tremendous scope for development, an outstanding future and an impressive working environment.

For general information, please contact Jon Young, Director of Personnel, on 071-320 6017. Alternatively, Christopher Clarke will be happy to answer your questions on 071-320 6876.

CVs should be sent to Jon Young at Five Chancery Lane, Clifford's Inn, London EC4A 1BU.

HONG KONG • TOKYO • SINGAPORE • BANGKOK
LOS ANGELES • BRUSSELS • MILTON KEYNES • LONDON

ALL BOX NO. REPLYES SHOULD BE SENT TO:

BOX NO. DEPT.
P.O. BOX 484,
VIRGINIA STREET
WAPPING
LONDON
E1 9BB

BARRISTERS with good special-ist experience in e.g. intellectual property, planning, tax or employment law are required for recognised City/Central London practices. Excellent salaries A&P. Contact: Law Personnel 071-242-1281 (24hrs).

RESIDENTIAL conveyancing - designate for south east London practice. Wonderful opportunity for a responsible mature solicitor or sole practitioner with wisdom and stability. Please write to Mrs. Pamela Handford 071-560-2382. West End Legal.

PENSIONS TRAPPEE sought by Central London PLC. Would suit recently qualified Barrister or Solicitor. Contact Law Personnel 071-242-1281 (24hrs).

New York based International Law firm requires barrister or solicitor for its London representative office. Applicants should have strong evidence credentials and recent 10 years commercial law experience. Salary negotiable and commensurate with experience. Please submit curriculum vitae and salary requirements in confidence to Box Q15.

MARINE litigation Solicitor 3-5 years PQE with a following? Newly formed marine litigation department of major City practice would welcome you. Please telephone Mrs. Pamela Handford 071-560-2382. West End Legal.

A POSITION OF TRUST Do you like to tax your strengths? Major prestigious West End practice seeks a Trust, Probate and Tax Partner. A comfortable future is assured in beautiful offices - nice people too. Salary commensurate with high quality of candidate expected.

Please telephone Mrs Pamela Handford 071-560-2382 West End Legal COMP/CCRM Prestigious Inn practice requires up to 3 years experience. To c. £40,000. 071 355 7086 Meredith Scott Assoc. Adv.

ASA LAW THE LEADING LOCUMS

SERVICE FOR SOLICITORS HAS COMPETENT LOCUMS IMMEDIATELY AVAILABLE IN ALL AREAS
071 236 4625
ASA HOUSE 6 LUDGATE SQ. EC4M 7AS. FAX 071 489 8478

LEGAL RESOURCES

A fast and efficient service nationwide
071-405 4985
53 Doughty Street London WC1N 2LS
Fax: 071-242 0208

kbw

The Chambers of Christopher Friday Q.C. which specialise in real property and landlord and tenant law invite applications from recently called Barristers for tenancies commencing during 1990. Applications should be submitted with a C.V. and the names of 2 referees to Paul Morgan by 29th June 1990.
11, King's Bench Walk, Temple, London, EC4Y 7EQ

FINANCIAL SERVICES

REUTER SIMKIN
LONDON • BIRMINGHAM
MANCHESTER • LEEDS • BRISTOL
GLoucester • SYDNEY

Please write with C.V. to J D Holt, Esq., Holt Phillips, 11/12 Queen Square, Bristol BS1 4NT.

LAW LONDON LAW APPOINTMENTS
3rd Floor, 41 Kingsway
London WC2B 6UD
Fax: 071-497 0406

Application forms and further particulars are available from my secretary, Mrs Jones, telephone (0908) 610628. Application to be received by 29th June 1990. Interviews will be held on 18th July 1990. A.B. James, Clerk to the Justices, 76 High Street, Newport Pagnell, Bucks MK16 8AQ.

150 Aldersgate Street, London EC1A 4EL

UNITED KINGDOM • HONG KONG • NEW ZEALAND • AUSTRALIA

Now is the time to contact us for advice and help in planning the next and vital step in your career. For those qualifying this year, there is a wide variety of vacancies in firms ranging from the smaller, progressive practices to the leading names in the City and Central London and throughout the Country. Telephone or write to us in strictest confidence if you are looking for a challenging and rewarding future.

Staff specialists to the legal profession worldwide
95 Aldwych, London WC2B 4JF Tel: 071-242 1281
Fax: 071-831 2901 (answerphone after office hours) or write to Karen Mulvihill or Ian Pearce on 071-405 4571

Tremendous opportunity to undertake very high quality company commercial work both within the UK and overseas. You will ideally be under 30 with a 2:1 degree and have major city firm commercial experience and be capable of handling a wide range of commercial and corporate matters.

Applied Management Sciences Ltd
26-28 Bedford Row,
London WC1R 4HE
Fax: 071-242 1411
Epping: 0281 250 1010

This medium sized well known commercial firm requires a number of newly or recently qualified high calibre solicitors to handle a variety of corporate and commercial work for clients including leisure and media companies.

High tech company requires a number 2 for the legal department with a minimum of 4 years' commercial experience to handle a range of work including mergers and acquisitions, contractual matters, competition and intellectual property.

The above are only a small selection from the positions we are currently instructed to fill. If you would like to discuss any of these or any other aspect of your career, please telephone
Laurence Simons or Shona McDougall
071-831 3270
(071-483 1899 evenings/weekends)
Or write to: Laurence Simons Associates, 33 John's Mews, London WC1N 2NS.
We are qualified lawyers with extensive experience in legal recruitment and all approaches are treated in strict confidence.

صبرنا من الامل

MOTOR RACING

By JOHN BLUNSDEN

By JOHN HENNESSY

By JENNY MACARTHUR

By RICHARD EATON

RUGBY LEAGUE

CRICKET
Britannic Assurance championship
 11.0, 110 overs minimum
DERBY: Derbyshire v Warwickshire
SOUTHAMPTON: Hampshire v
 Glamorgan
LEICESTER: Leicestershire v
 Middlesex
BATH: Somerset v Essex
THE OVAL: Surrey

ALAN Tait, the former Scottish

Worcestershire
HOVE: Sussex v Gloucestershire

Other matches
11.30-5.30
FENNER'S: Cambridge University
Nottinghamshire
THE PARKS: Oxford University
Lancashire

BAIN CLARISON TROPHY: Portsmouth
Sussex, Flounden; North antspansure v Yorkshire, Birmingham
Warrickshire v Glamorgan.

HIGH COUNTIES CUP-KENSHIP: Barrow, Cumberland v Norfolk.

OTHER SPORT

CYCLING: Isle of Man Week.
MOTOR SPORT: Proff Classic Marathon.
SPEEDWAY: National League, Long Eton; Premier League, Poole v Ipswich.

TENNIS: Direct Line tournament
(Manchester); Pilkington Glass tournament (Bournemouth); Writal International (Nottingham); Wimbledon qualifying rounds
(London).

The Wednesday side has

SPORT ON TV

Jonathan Davies at stand-off and the Welshman is one of only four players on both lists. Graham Steadman the original choice at stand-off has a knee

SPORT ON TV

BASKETBALL: BSB 2-4pm: Highlights of the NBA play-off final series between Detroit Pistons and Portland Trail injury, and the move for Davies reflects Britain's narrowing op-

Sluzba.

The recently arrived Martin

Offiah is in the international party

DOYLE

GREAT BRITAIN (v Kiwi Colts, Huntly): A Tait (Witness): P. Eastwood (Hull). S. Irwin

ROYAL

(Castleford), D Powell (Sheffield Eagles), J Devenaux (Widnes), J Davies (Widnes), D

Execut

Fox (Featherstone Hovers); R Power (Leeds), L Jackson (Hull), K Fairbank (Bradford N), I Smales (Featherstone R).

EXCERPT

G Price (Wakefield Trinity), D Bishop (Hull KR). Substitutes: R Simpson (Bradford Northern), P Clarke (Wigan).

Daily Member
Attend the country's premier

GREAT BRITAIN SQUAD (v New Zealand): C Bibb (Featherstone Rovers), D surrounds of the Ascot Hospital 11

 000000000000

Power (Sheffield Eagles), C Gibson (Leeds), J Lydon (Wigan), M Offiah (Widnes), J Davies (Widnes), G Schofield

4 Course Lunch
Afternoon tea

(Leeds), D Fox (Featherstone Rovers), B Goulding (Wigan), K Skerrett (Bradford Northern), Ian Lucas (Wigan), B Powell

FF	Entrance badge
NR	Race card
WR	Hospitality Village pass

(Leeds), M Dermott (Wigan), K England (Castleford), P Dixon (Leeds), D Betts (Leeds), A Grogan (Leeds).

no	Privilege car parking
----	-----------------------

(Wigan), W. Langley (Warrington),

1

EXHIBIT CINO

Daily Membership £69.00
Attend the country's premier racing occasion within the exclusive surrounds of the Ascot Hospitality Executive Club. Daily Membership includes:

10- 4 Course Lunch
 10- Afternoon tea

TR Entrance badges
MR Race card
VR Hospitality Village pass

TR 071-839 9388
 for reservations

no Privilege car parking

1

The Times studies a relaxed manager who knows the importance of team relationships in the fraught World Cup arena

Harmony the keynote of German success

Erbe

IF A West German team split with internal dissent could reach the final of the 1986 World Cup, what chance a squad now playing in Italy in near-perfect harmony?

The debonair Franz Beckenbauer, more relaxed than any of his 23 rival manager-coaches, hopes his side have not reached a peak too early.

After the so-called controversy of Germany being switched at the time of the draw in December, as the seeded team of group E in Verona to group D in Milan, Beckenbauer's squad is comfortably established in the lake district 50 minutes from

DAVID MILLER
ON THE
WORLD CUP

San Siro, with the prospect of playing both second round and quarter-final in Milan.

For the semi-final, which would be in Turin, they would be able to remain for preparation at their leafy hillside resort here beside a chattering Alpine stream, secure behind remote-controlled gates and with enough armed police for a prime minister's visit on checkpoint duty down the minor country road.

Environmentally, the Germans are as well situated as temperamentally: unquestionably, with Italy, Belgium and Brazil, one of the present front-runners. Such is the self-confidence coursing through the camp that Völler, the Roma half of the striking partnership with Klinsmann, of Inter, felt able to boast, after the five-goal victory over the Emiratis: "Klinsmann and I are at the moment the best pair of strikers in the cup." It must be hoped, for his sake, he is not tempting providence: against the Emiratis, he missed four easy chances in 11 minutes before there was any score.

Beckenbauer, whose manner is urbane and given to understatement, is himself of the view that all is going well. "It's encouraging, on every point," he says carefully, having just given his daily hour-long press conference, punctuated with smiles and free from any defensive guardedness. "Technically, the squad is stronger all round than four years ago, and has matured since the European championship of 1988 [when losing the semi-final to the Netherlands]."

The communication between players, he says, is excellent, on and off the field. "There are no groups at meal times, as there were in Mexico — a Bayern table here, a Cologne table there," he says.

"Not only is the team playing well, but the six players who are not even substitutes are in a happy mood and contribute to the morale of the side." Beckenbauer was one of those urging FIFA to allow all 11 reserves to be on the bench and available as substitutes: not only for the more exact replacement of an injured player, but for the psychological benefit of the whole squad. When FIFA refused, he accused them of being out of touch.

"Part of the way to achieve harmony in the squad is in selection," he says. The clear implication is that he deliberately left out one or two players whom he regarded as disruptive. One of those was probably Dörner, of Bayern, a surprise omission in midfield.

After three World Cup final tournaments as a player, with one losing and one winning final and a semi-final, Beckenbauer well knows the significance of team relationships; even if German temperament is so level that they have more chance of playing well than most teams when divided among themselves.

What pleases Beckenbauer is that he is able to work with the squad both directly and through his captain, Lothar Matthäus, also with Inter. "He has learned a lot in Italy," Beckenbauer says. "In the past, you sometimes couldn't see him in important games, but now he is willing to take responsibility."

Beckenbauer's own relationship as captain with Helmut Schoen, the manager, was thought to be unstable, he exercising undue influence. He knows the risks within such partnerships. He will not say, for the moment, whether this is a better team than any of those in which he played. It is too early, he says, though he believes the motivation could not be stronger.

He deflects, as being absurd, the notion that Germany would have any motive to collaborate with Columbia today in order to assist qualification: as in the shameful arranged draw with Austria in Spain in 1982. A point now would assure Columbia of third place.

Whatever the outcome in Italy, his role as team manager will terminate. Bertie Vogts succeeding him. He intends to go into marketing and sponsorship for DFB, the German federation.

Although he has made a small fortune from the game, Beckenbauer has managed never to seem a mercenary, not even in his days with Cosmos. His dignity has never deserted him. He is one of few men whose reputation has come close to challenging the maxim that the game is greater than the players.

Charlton chastised after his criticism of Egyptian tactics

From CLIVE WHITE
IN PALERMO

JACK Charlton could not have invited a more vitriolic attack upon himself and the Republic of Ireland's style of play had he chosen to open up a pharaoh's tomb. His harsh criticism of the Egyptians' tactics in Sunday's vacuous, goalless draw was returned here yesterday with more than a bit to spare.

Judging by the spiky response to his complaints that Egypt made no attempt to play and wasted time, Charlton would be well advised never to walk alone at night in the cashbar. He was accused of being discourteous to the Egyptian nation and "guilty of verbal aggression".

At first sight, it appeared the Egyptians had chosen to turn the other cheek. The Egyptian interpreter at the African team's retreat outside of Palermo announced that the manager and his players would be in "spiritual retirement" until after the England game on Thursday.

But if Colonel Mahmoud

El-Gohary, the Egypt coach, was keeping mum, Dr Ahmed El-Mokadem, the team's sponsor and a professor in economics at Surrey University, was in no mood to hold back his anger.

"Jack Charlton talks too much," he said. "He has been very impolite and unkind to Egypt. Billions of people around the world heard his comments. He went too far. He failed to show British courtesy and sense of fair play."

"I know people say Jack is modest but I don't see how you can equate modesty with verbal aggression. We understand what psychological warfare is all about. The pharaohs started it. But there are courtesies to be observed and he was not courteous."

"He acted on impulse. What he should have done was what we do in England — have a cup of tea and a piece of cake, watch TV, go to bed, sleep on it, discuss it with your players — and then speak."

As the manager of international football's spoilers, Charlton left himself wide open to charges of hypocrisy when he accused the Egyptians of doing likewise. His complaints about time-wasting on the part of the Egyptians was also unwise — as El-Mokadem pointed out.

"When Charlton was playing at Leeds, what he used to do to gain a couple of minutes here and there was much worse," he said.

El-Mokadem then turned a critical eye upon the Irish team's tactics. "England played very well against Holland," he said. "The bad performance by England against Ireland was decided by the type of football Ireland play."

"When we played against Ireland, we also played lousy. The way the Irish play for an unentertaining game on the opposition. It is a puzzle like football has never had to solve before."

"We don't have the stamina to contain the war of attrition they conducted against us. If the Dutch are in better physical condition than we have seen so far, they're capable of containing them [Ireland] and then proceeding forward to develop an attack to score."

Essam Monem, the Egyptian FA treasurer, is convinced that the match against England will be "the most beautiful game of the group". El-Mokadem was prepared to concede that any game would have to be more beautiful than playing against the Irish.

Tag the Irish are stuck with

Rome
IF YOU have got nothing good to say about a man then say nothing. In Italy, if you have got nothing bad to say about a British football team, then why not?

Having spent the first week of this World Cup in England watching all of the matches on television, I am now in Italy to see a selection of games right through to the final in Rome on Sunday, July 8.

Due to delayed flights resulting in the inevitable missed connection, the journey from my home in Birmingham to Palermo in Sicily took a very long 16 hours. So I was 30,000 feet in the air when England and Scotland furthered their World Cup ambitions against the Netherlands and Sweden.

On landing, I was somewhat grudgingly informed that England had played quite well but that the Dutch were terrible, and that Scotland had beaten a very poor Swedish team. Without having seen either match, my immediate thought was that both results looked good ones, and that the prospects of the two British teams qualifying for the second phase were better than they had been after the first matches.

GRAHAM TAYLOR
ON THE
WORLD CUP

A cause for optimism, I would have thought. But I did not detect any such thing from my company. My first live game was Egypt against the Republic of Ireland, and while I would be one of the first to admit that no one would select this match as a World Cup classic, I was amazed at the generally negative reaction towards the Irish team.

It appears to me that their game against England, which everybody back home would have recognised as a bad Football League match, never mind a poor international one, has so set people's minds as to what to expect when they play that they are being prejudged.

Perhaps Jack Charlton's comments to the effect that no matter who the opposition are his team will not alter the way they play has exaggerated the actual Irish style in the eyes of certain commentators.

When labels are stuck on you, people generally start believing what they hear, and not what they actually see. We all love the Irish supporters, but do not like their team. That seems to be the mood of things. Why? Because they play the British way. What is the British way?

If I listen to six different people I will get six different answers. I like to think that I can join in most football discussions but when the tone of such conversations is negatively biased I try to move on. So that is what I have done.

I am now in Rome eagerly anticipating tonight's Group A match between Italy and Czechoslovakia and I have to say that my mood has been incredibly heartened by the hotel porter who informed me: "Ah, Mister Taylor, you play so different, I much enjoy it..."

Hands up: Preud'homme, the goalkeeper, leads the Belgian celebrations after their win over Uruguay in Verona

Spain rely on magic of Michel

Spain 2-1 Uruguay

UDINE (Reuters) — Michel scored the first treble of the World Cup on Sunday to help Spain to a 2-1 win over South Korea and move them within sight of a place in the second round. A hooked volley midway through the first half, an exquisitely placed free kick just after an hour and a jinking run ending in a left-footed strike nine minutes from time showed the best of the stylish Michel's skills.

Kwan-Hwang-bo scored two minutes before half-time to keep South Korea's hopes of staying in contention in group E alive. But a second successive defeat — they lost 2-0 to Belgium in their opening match — means they have little chance of squeezing through to the second round.

Spain, taking their tally to three points from two games, were almost guaranteed a place in the last 16. But only the three moments of Michel's magic lifted a performance that was far from smooth or convincing.

The Spaniards' wasted chances and a second successive lacklustre showing by the usually razor-sharp Butragueno forced and captain being substituted 13 minutes from time.

Changes from the team that lost to Belgium, made most of the early running as Spain took time to get into gear. Choi In-young, the goalkeeper who was blamed for handing Belgium their first goal five days earlier, played well and kept out most of the Spanish attempts. But there was nothing he could do to prevent Luis Suarez, the Spain manager, said: "The victory will certainly lead to a more relaxed atmosphere among us."

Spain: 1 A Zubizarreta, 2 Crenco, 4 G Andueza, 5 M Sanchez, 14 A Gortzi, 11 F Villaverde, 21 Mendi, 15 Roberto (sub: 16 J M Salas), 6 M Vitorino, 19 J Salas, 9 E Butragueno (sub: 10 F Garcia).
SOUTH KOREA: 21 Choi In-young, 30 Kang-hee (sub: 13 Chung Jong-soo), 20 Hong Kyung-don, 17 Gu Sang-don, 8 Yoon Kwang-soo, 9 Park Kyung-don, 9 Yoon Kwang-soo, 6 Chung Hye-won (sub: 7 Hoon Seon), 14 Choi Son-ho.
Referee: E. Guerrero (Colombia).

Belgium counting the cost of second-round qualification

Belgium 3-1 Uruguay

VERONA (Reuters) — Belgium counted the cost yesterday of reaching the second round of the finals. Their defeat of Uruguay in a bruising match in Verona on Sunday is likely to leave them without three key players for their last group E fixture against Spain on Thursday.

Gerets, the defender, was sent off three minutes before the interval for his second bookable offence, and will automatically miss the next game. Clusters, aged 33, struck with a powerful drive. Uruguay pressed forward after the goal and, having squandered several chances, eventually managed to pull one back.

Benegas, a second-half substitute, scored in the 72nd minute when he met a cross from the left of De Leon with a right-foot volley.

Clusters and Scifo had scored twice for the Belgians in their 22 minutes. Clusters concluding a move initiated by Ceulemans. De Wolf crossed from the left and Clusters headed home firmly into the far corner.

Seven minutes later, Scifo made a square pass from the left and Scifo met it with a tremendous right-foot shot from 30 yards which thundered into the net as the goalkeeper, Alvarez, dived in vain.

Gerets received his first caution for a clattering tackle on Paz in the 36th minute. The East German referee, Siegfried Kirschen, gave him his marching orders in the 42nd minute for a robust challenge on the elusive Sosa.

URUGUAY (4-3-3): 1 F Alvarez, 4 J Herrera, 2 N Gubierrez, 3 M De Leon, 6 A Dominguez, 5 P Benegas, 10 R Paz, 7 A Azamendi (sub: 18 C Aguilera), 9 E Francescoli, 11 R Sosa.
Referee: S Kirschen (East Germany).

Meanwhile, in Florence, Austria and the United States will both attempt to avoid the embarrassment of returning home without collecting a single point.

The United Arab Emirates are similarly pointless at the moment, but at least their players have the consolation that goals against Yugoslavia in their group D meeting in Bologna this afternoon will earn Rolis Royce for the scorers. The expected Yugoslav win will put them in the second round for only the second time since 1962.

Both teams are level on four points at the head of the group, and in the event of a draw the Czechoslovaks would assume pole position on goal difference by virtue of their 5-1 victory over the United States.

The Czechoslovaks will be without Lubos Kubik, the free kick specialist who defected to Derby County last season but now plays for Fiorentina, in the Italian League. He is serving a suspension incurred after receiving two yellow cards.

WORLD CUP NOTEBOOK

Cutting a dash as wolfhound

EVER since a Scottish supporter arrived in Argentina by submarine, the World Cup has been a focus for the antics of supporters who travel on their wit.

Italy 90 has thrown up a man who dresses as a dog, an intrepid cyclist, and a "self-anything-anywhere" salesman.

Adrian Mooney, alias "Macul", the team mascot, had his trip to Italy paid for by the Republic of Ireland's sponsors to do a grey Irish wolfhound costume and pose round Palermo. The Dublin University student, aged 20, has gone down a storm. Prity about the football.

A bar owner, Ramon Muzo, from Majorca, pedalled 1,100 miles to take in Spain's match against South Korea on Sunday night. The 115-mile hop to Verona for Spain's match against Belgium on Thursday will be a breeze.

Chris Musill, from London, is doing a routine round in souvenirs. He was selling red-and-yellow striped scarves, caps and flags to Spanish supporters at Udine on Sunday. Yesterday, he was on the train to Bari to take in the Czechoslovak-Soviet Union. Musill has already flown back to London once to stock up on new wares, and by the time he leaves Italy on Thursday, he expects to have sold souvenirs at eight matches. Best customers? The Irish and the Swedes.

Bridal party

FOR many brides, a honeymoon spent at the World Cup would prove the precursor of divorce proceedings. Happily, that is not the case for Beverly and Peter Mapp, two Sunderland supporters, who married a fortnight ago and set out from Newcastle to Sardinia by coach with 44 others from the north-east to cheer on England.

The Mapps and friends — a mixture of Newcastle and Sunderland supporters — are staying in a hotel in Muravera, a village 40km from Cagliari. Tim O'Brien, the group organiser, arranged a football match with the village team, which the locals won 4-2, followed by a "barbecue" and "nightclub". Perhaps our Georgian accents have confused them and they don't think we are really English.

Hated panzers

RODNEY Marsh may not have realised it at the time, as the nation cringed, but his description of West Germany "moving forward like panzer divisions" would ring true with Italians. The West Germans who play in the Italian League are often called "panzers". The news that before England's game against the Netherlands, West Germany will be the hooligan army league proper, is a rather different prospect. The panzer hooligans are more violent and dangerous than the English.

No answer

EWENT the computer used by the World Cup organisers to predict the last 16 has drawn a blank with the long-drawn dogfight for honours in group F. The prediction came out with cast-iron forecasts for the second round but choked on filling in the names from England and the Republic's group.

PREDICTED SECOND ROUND: Czechoslovakia v Colombia (Milan, 4.0); Argentina v United Arab Emirates (Bologna, 4.0); Yugoslavia v Uruguay (Verona, 4.0); Austria v United States (Florence, 6.0).

Leading scorers

1. Abel El Ghazi (Egypt), 3 goals (Rome, 6.0); 2. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0); 3. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0); 4. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0); 5. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0); 6. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0); 7. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0); 8. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0); 9. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0); 10. Baki (Czechoslovakia), 3 goals (Milan, 4.0).

TELEVISION

EUROSPORT 11.30am-1.30pm: Highlights of Argentina v Romania and Cameroon v Soviet Union. Coverage of Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates (4.0) and Austria v United States (6.0); Highlights of West Germany v Colombia, Italy v Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates.

GROUP A

	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
Czech	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Italy	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Austria	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
United States	2	0	0	0	0	0	0

Previous results

ITALY 1 AUSTRIA 0 (in Rome, June 9)

US 0 CZECH 0 (in Florence, June 10)

ITALY 1 US 0 (in Rome, June 14)

AUSTRIA 0 CZECH 0 (in Florence, June 15)

Remaining fixtures

Today: Italy v Czechoslovakia (Rome, 8.0), Austria v United States (Florence, 6.0).

GROUP B

	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
Cameroon	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Romania	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Argentina	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Soviet Union	2	0	0	0	0	0	0

Previous results

ARGENTINA 0 CAMEROON 0 (in Milan, June 9)

ROMANIA 1 USSR 0 (in Bari, June 9)

ARGENTINA 1 USSR 0 (in Naples, June 13)

CAMEROON 0 ROMANIA 0 (in Bari, June 14)

Remaining fixtures

Not included: June 18: Argentina v Romania (Naples, 8.0), Cameroon v Soviet Union (Bari, 4.0).

GROUP C

	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
Brazil	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Sweden	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Costa Rica	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Switzerland	2	0	0	0	0	0	0

Previous results

BRASIL 1 SWEDEN 0 (in Turin, June 10)

SCOTLAND 0 C RICA 0 (in Genoa, June 11)

BRASIL 1 C RICA 0 (in Turin, June 16)

SWEDEN 1 SCOTLAND 0 (in Genoa, June 18)

Remaining fixtures

Tomorrow: Brazil v Scotland (Turin, 6.0), Sweden v Costa Rica (Genoa, 8.0).

GROUP D

	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
West Germany	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Colombia	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Yugoslavia	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
UAE	2	0	0	0	0	0	0

Previous results

UAE 0 COLOMBIA 0 (in Bologna, June 12)

GERMANY 2 YUGOSLAVIA 1 (in Milan, June 10)

BRASIL 1 C RICA 0 (in Turin, June 16)

YUGOSLAVIA 1 COLOMBIA 0 (in Bologna, June 14)

Remaining fixtures

Today: West Germany v Colombia (Milan, 4.0), Yugoslavia v UAE (Bologna, 4.0).

GROUP E

	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
Belgium	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Spain	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Uruguay	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
South Korea	2	0	0	0	0	0	0

Previous results

BELOGIUM 2 S KOREA 0 (in Verona, June 12)

URUGUAY 1 SPAIN 0 (in Udine, June 13)

BELOGIUM 2 URUGUAY 0 (in Verona, June 17)

SPAIN 1 S KOREA 0 (in Verona, June 17)

Remaining fixtures

June 21: Belgium v Spain (England, 4.0), Uruguay v South Korea (Florence, 4.0).

GROUP F

	P	W	D	L	F	A	Pts
Egypt	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
England	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Netherlands	2	0	0	0	0	0	0
Rep of Ire	2	0	0	0	0	0	0

Previous results

ENGLAND 1 REP OF IRE 0 (in Cagliari, June 11)

| NETHERLANDS 0 1 EGYPT 0 (in Palermo, June 17) |

Remaining fixtures

June 21: England v Egypt (Cagliari, 8.0), Netherlands v Republic of Ireland (Palermo, 8.0).

Today

Group D

West Germany v Colombia (Milan, 4.0)

Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates (Bologna, 4.0)

Group A

Italy v Czechoslovakia (Rome, 8.0).

Austria v United States (Florence, 6.0)

Tomorrow

Group B

Brazil v Scotland (Turin, 6.0)

Sweden v Costa Rica (Genoa, 8.0)

TELEVISION

Today

EUROSPORT 11.30am-1.30pm: Highlights of Argentina v Cameroon v Soviet Union, Coverage of Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates (4.0) and Austria v United States (6.0) Highlights of West Germany v Colombia, Italy v Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates.

Tomorrow

EUROSPORT 8.30am-6.0pm Highlights of Austria v US, West Germany v

WORLD CUP FIXTURES

Today
Group D
West Germany v Colombia (Milan, 4.0)
Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates (Bologna, 4.0)

Group A
Italy v Czechoslovakia (Rome, 8.0)
Austria v United States (Florence, 6.0)

Group B
Brazil v Scotland (Turin, 6.0)
Sweden v Costa Rica (Genoa, 8.0)

Tomorrow
Group D
West Germany v Colombia (Milan, 4.0)
Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates (Bologna, 4.0)

Group A
Italy v Czechoslovakia (Rome, 8.0)
Austria v United States (Florence, 6.0)

Group B
Brazil v Scotland (Turin, 6.0)
Sweden v Costa Rica (Genoa, 8.0)

Today
EUROSPORT 11.30am-1.30pm: Highlights of Argentina v Romania and Cameroon v Soviet Union. Coverage of Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates (4.0) and Austria v United States (6.0); Highlights of West Germany v Colombia, Italy v Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia v United Arab Emirates.

Tomorrow
EUROSPORT 8.30am-5.00pm: Highlights of Austria v US, West Germany v

Bats

Going good to firm...
2.30 QUEEN ANNE'S STAKES
100 (4) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (5) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (6) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (7) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (8) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (9) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (10) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (11) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (12) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (13) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (14) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (15) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (16) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (17) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (18) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (19) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (20) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (21) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (22) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (23) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (24) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (25) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (26) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (27) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (28) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (29) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (30) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (31) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (32) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (33) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (34) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (35) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (36) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (37) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (38) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (39) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (40) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (41) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (42) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (43) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (44) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (45) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (46) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (47) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (48) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (49) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (50) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (51) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (52) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (53) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (54) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (55) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (56) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (57) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (58) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (59) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (60) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (61) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (62) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (63) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (64) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (65) 11/10 F. DOLAN
100 (66) 11/10 F. DOLAN

SPORT

Robson out of decisive game

From STUART JONES
FOOTBALL CORRESPONDENT
CAGLIARI

ENGLAND are preparing to avoid the dreaded prospect of a lottery by qualifying as a group F, but they must do so without Bryan Robson. The captain's damaged toe has improved but, like Achilles, his heel remains a weakness and prompts thoughts that he will not be available on Thursday.

Bobby Robson is already resigned to being without his namesake for the decisive tie against Egypt. "In my mind, I'm thinking that I'll have to replace him," he said yesterday. "If he does recover, I will consider that a bonus." Although Lincker also missed training with a bruised toe, he will be fit.

It is as well that England's manager has found a system which can work adequately without the midfield player who has so effectively guarded the back four during the last two years. It would be even more regrettable now if Bobby Robson alters the formation he used against the Netherlands.

He could change the personnel. The speedy Parker would be a greater asset as one of the central defensive markers than the tall and less mobile Butcher, for example, and Steven might be creatively more productive than Parker on the right flank. Yet he must persist with Wright in the sweeper's role.

Without Bryan Robson, England would otherwise be not only vulnerable in the centre of the defence, but also less forceful in attack. McMahon, who was originally being groomed as the understudy for the captain, can step into the position and act as Gascoigne's assistant in midfield.

Although Gascoigne is the revelation of the group so far, he still requires protection. "He needs someone who understands him," in the words of Bobby Robson. Platt, adequately though he performed when he came on as Bryan Robson's substitute on Saturday, is not yet experienced enough convincingly to carry the onerous responsibility.

McMahon should be allowed to compensate for his error which cost England a point in the opening tie against the Republic of Ireland. Had he not lost control, there would be no urgent need for Bobby Robson to consider dismissing the possibility of being involved in a game of Russian roulette in Rome on Thursday night.

"There is one way to avoid that," he said, "and that is to get two points. Our destiny is in our own hands and I'll pick a side which gives us a chance of winning." He added, significantly, that it also "must not lose". McMahon

Seeking inspiration: Robson, the manager, consults one of the bibles presented to his team as the England party prepare to face Egypt would be the more secure option.

World Cup, page 40

Sunday's dreary goalless draw in Palermo, which was unquestionably the worst tie of the World Cup, offered further evidence that the Egyptians would be satisfied with a draw.

"But if I was given the choice, I would rather be in the position we are in now. With respect to Egypt, I'm glad that we are facing them, rather than the Irish or the Dutch."

In case the spirits were not high enough, a presentation was made at the end of training which suggests that his squad is also receiving divine guidance. The church in Cagliari, after being thanked for helping England's supporters, returned the gesture by donating a bible to each of the players.

Strömberg storm for Nordin

CAMOGGI (AFP) — Ollie Nordin's dilemma over the Italian Alps discovered, on arrival yesterday, that we were about to be exposed to a classic tale of Brazilian intrigue and politics emanating from the South American camp at Asti.

Defeats in both World Cup group C games have led to calls for Nordin's head from Swedish supporters and the media, who are furious that he has not played Strömberg from the start of the games against Brazil and Scotland.

The Swedish newspaper, Aftonbladet, said it received hundreds of telephone calls from irate readers after the 2-1 defeat by Scotland on Saturday.

Nordin refuses to say whether he will play Strömberg from the start of tomorrow night's make-or-break match against Costa Rica. "Although he was lively in both games, I don't think that is the only reason why I should put Strömberg in," the Swedish coach said. "Maybe if we had put him on earlier against Scotland we could have had more chances, but you must remember that he came on with 15 to 20 minutes left against a tired back line."

Strömberg, who has followed Scotland into their mountain fortress at St Vincent in the Italian Alps discovered, on arrival yesterday, that we were about to be exposed to a classic tale of Brazilian intrigue and politics emanating from the South American camp at Asti.

Scots dismiss Brazil 'plan'

From RODDY FORSYTH IN AOSTA

THOSE of us who have followed Scotland into their mountain fortress at St Vincent in the Italian Alps discovered, on arrival yesterday, that we were about to be exposed to a classic tale of Brazilian intrigue and politics emanating from the South American camp at Asti.

According to the testimony of the Brazilian journalists who had attended their team's press conference earlier that day, the manager, Sebastião Lazaroni, had stated that he intended to scrutinise the outcome of the concluding fixtures in group A today before deciding on his line-up for the match against Scotland in Turin tomorrow evening.

The Brazilian reporters' interpretation of the rumour is that Lazaroni wishes to avoid a collision with Italy before the World Cup final itself, the implication of which is simply that the Brazilian manager

HOW THEY QUALIFY

The top two in each of the six groups will go through to the second round; they will be joined by the four most successful third-placed finishers. The third-place qualifiers will be decided first, on points; second, on goal difference; third, on goals; fourth, by the drawing of lots.

might be prepared to see his team falter against Scotland if it should suit his purpose. To put it more crudely, if Italy should finish at the head of group A, a 2-0 defeat for Brazil tomorrow would put Scotland at the head of group C and divert the Brazilians into the half of the ballot which would not include Italy.

Very little is beyond belief once the jostling for places begins before the knock-out stage of the finals, but even if Lazaroni intended such an improbable manoeuvre, it would be exceptionally incautious to make his strategy public. He could always, of course, be hinting to the Italians that they might prefer to execute the same manoeuvre with Czechoslovakia, thus leaving Brazil free to do whatever they please against Scotland. However, the Italians would unquestionably feel safer in the half of the draw which includes Brazil and not West Germany.

As a parlour game, this offers hours of endless fun for the media but for Andy Roxburgh it was an irritating distraction. "If it was true it would be a wonderful example of forward planning," he said, upon hearing the Brazilian messengers' tale. Along with the Scottish press, he was more direct: "We totally disregard such nonsense. I am not going to get involved in all this. It's rubbish."

Turning to his own permutations, he confirmed that Craig Levein, who performed satisfactorily against the Swedes, was suffering from an unspecified thigh injury. "I'm afraid that at this stage of the season fitness is always a problem. I have to see who has recovered from Saturday and our medical people have been asked to feed me information."

SECOND ROUND: June 23: B1 v A3/C3/D3 (Naples, 4.00); A2 v C2 (Bari, 8.00). June 24: C1 v A3/B3/F3 (Turin, 4.00); D1 v B3/E3/F3 (Milan, 8.00). June 25: A1 v C3/D3/E3 (Rome, 8.00); F2 v B2 (Genoa, 4.00). June 26: F1 v E2 (Bologna, 8.00); E1 v D2 (Verona, 4.00).

£3m the cost of demotion say Swindon

By DENNIS SIGNS

THE decision of the Football League to demote Swindon Town from the first to the third division would cost the club £3 million, the High Court was told yesterday.

The League had ordered the demotion after Swindon officials had, earlier this month, pleaded guilty to 36 charges relating to cash payments. The decision will be tested in the High Court in the first week of July.

Mr Justice Mummery was told in the High Court yesterday that the trial, which is expected to last three days, will decide whether there has been a breach of natural justice. He will rule this morning on Swindon's claim that the punishment of demotion set by a Football League commission this month was excessive, and "harsh, oppressive and disproportionate to previous penalties".

A few Swindon supporters, some wearing club scarves, were in court 51 to hear, appropriately, 90 minutes of legal argument between the two Queen's Counsel, Michael Burton, representing the League, and Michael Beloff, for Swindon.

The League will today give an undertaking not to publish their fixtures before July 6. Swindon will undertake to compensate for any contractual delay in publication of the fixtures for pools purposes if they lose the case, which, the court, was told, could cost £190,000 a week.

Arthur Sandford, the chief executive of the League, said after the hearing that it was "custom and practice" for the fixtures to be published by the end of June, eight to 10 weeks before the new season.

Oswaldo Ardiles, the manager of Swindon, who trained in Argentinean law, sat with arms folded in the back row of the courtroom. Gary Herbert, his chairman, sat a row in

Bowyer is defended by Clough

By CHRIS MOORE

BRIAN Clough last night sprang to the defence of Ian Bowyer, his former midfielder player who was sacked as manager of Hereford United last weekend.

Peter Hill, the Hereford chairman, said that Bowyer's dismissal followed his failure to sign his son, Gary, on a professional contract with the Edgar Street club.

Gary Bowyer played 21 League and cup games for Hereford last season as a non-contract player, but is now expected to sign a professional contract with Clough's Nottingham Forest.

"I take the blame for a lot of things in life but I sincerely hope I am not being held responsible for Ian Bowyer's departure from Hereford," Clough said.

"I also hope the Hereford chairman has not compromised Ian over his son because, like any young footballer, his dad is free to go where he wishes."

"I admit we have spoken to him and he has indicated that he would like to join us."

"My son was free to go anywhere and he chose to join us. Archie Gemmill's son was in the same category and chose to join us. As I understand it, Ian's dad wants to follow suit."

Hereford clearly feel Bowyer put his son's interests before the club's. "There could no longer be any trust between the directors and the manager," Hill claimed.

"Because Gary was not on a contract with us, we cannot ask for the normal fee. We have lost a lot of money over this. But if he does sign for Forest, we will be seeking some compensation."

front with legal representatives.

Burton quoted from the red Football League handbook to explain how Swindon had breached the rules over a period from 1985, when the club was in the fourth division, to last season, when they gained promotion to the first after winning the play-off against Sunderland at Wembley.

Burton, on behalf of the League, asked the judge to strike out part of the club's claim that the penalty was unfair. He said there was no substance in Swindon's suggestion that the penalty of double demotion should be rendered null and void and that the court could only rule if there were breaches of natural justice. He said it would be like asking the court "for a declaration that Maradona scored a goal with his hand."

Burton outlined the charges against Swindon relating to cash payments to players, side agreements and bonuses, and said that the club had asked for "a large number" of additional offences to be taken into consideration.

Burton said that the composition of the League commission was decided by the Football Association. Swindon had until Thursday to appeal, he said, but had not yet done so. Burton said that the issue was not for the courts.

Arguing that the sentence was excessive, Beloff, for Swindon, said the cost to Swindon of demotion was likely to be £3 million. He said that the club was not a voice crying in the wilderness because they were the victim; the Professional Footballers' Association had already issued a statement saying that the penalty was out of proportion and associated themselves with Swindon.

Harford assumes the reins

By LOUISE TAYLOR

BOBBY Gould and Wimbledon are to part company, with Ray Harford, the assistant manager, taking charge of team affairs as caretaker.

Sam Hamman, the chairman of the first division club, said yesterday: "Strictly speaking, Bobby is on extended leave until December, when his contract ends. He is still under contract with us but all his duties as manager have been taken over while he serves his notice."

"If another club approaches him in the meantime, that is something that he and the club would have to look at closely. We have a warm and loving relationship with Bobby and want to do what is right for him. If he wants to go and take a long break in the sun, he is welcome to do that. If he wants to spend the time in Germany or Italy studying the game over there, he could do that with our blessing, too."

Gould is understood to have rejected Wimbledon's offer of a new contract because it did not meet his financial demands. Aged 44, he joined the south-west London club in June 1987, having managed Bristol Rovers and Coventry. Continuing to promote the long-ball style initiated by Dave Bassett, Gould guided Wimbledon to victory over Liverpool in the 1988 FA Cup final.

"I am just taking stock of the situation," Gould said yesterday. "I will have to think about this over the next few days but these have been three super years at Wimbledon."

Harford, who succeeded Don Howe as Gould's assistant earlier this year, managed Luton Town and Fulham.

Irish gather forces to face future challenge

By GEORGE ACE

THE challenge of the 90s was the theme at the Irish Rugby Football Union club conference in Dublin at the weekend, the first organised by that body.

Around 200 delegates attended the plenary and syndicate sessions and were led in their thinking by papers given by such as A. R. Dawson, Sid Millar, Noel Murphy and George Spotswood.

Under consideration by the delegates was the present IRFU organisation and policy together with the examination of Irish club structure. Much interest surrounded the necessity to spread the influence of the game in Ireland in face of the competition from hockey and football.

Delegates examined attitudes in Ireland towards amateurism, public relations, use of IRFU income, the new league structure, payments for coaches, and the early identification of talented players.

With the formation of an exiles' group in Britain, the appointment of Noel Murphy to take charge of under-25 and under-21 rugby, and the expected ratification of changes to the management structure of the national team, the IRFU is now sorting itself out for this decade.

LOOK WHAT POURED OUT WHEN THE JUDGES TRIED THE SINGLETON.

"The Singleton has all the smoothness one associates with the finest malts, without a trace of harshness."

"A unique taste and delicate aroma."

"Wonderfully smooth."

"It has a velvety, nutty character which comes from ageing in oak."

"Oh, oh, ohhh."

At last year's International Wine and Spirit Competition the judges were effusive. And they had no hesitation in voting The Singleton the worthy winner of the Pot Still of Glasgow Trophy for the best single malt whisky.

Try a glass or two and judge for yourself.

THE SINGLETON OF AUCHOIRSK

Capriati sets seeding age record

By ANDREW LONGMORE,
TENNIS CORRESPONDENT

JENNIFER Capriati was confirmed as the youngest seed in grand slam history by the Wimbledon seedings committee yesterday. By virtue of reaching the semi-final of the French Open on her grand slam debut, quite apart from a series of impressive performances on the Kraft world tour, Capriati, aged 14 years and 2½ months, will tackle her first Wimbledon seeded No. 12.

That might be thought an unnecessary burden for the young American to carry, given that her grass-court experience is limited to last year's junior Wimbledon, when she reached the quarter-finals, but Capriati has shown little sign of being overawed by anyone or anything in her first three months as a professional and her status as a seed will certainly not deter her.

For the fourth time in five years, Ivan Lendl has been seeded No. 1 in the men's singles. For the fourth consecutive year, Steffi Graf and

Singles seeds

Men
1. I Lendl (Cz); 2. B Becker (Wg); 3. S Edberg (Swe); 4. J McEnroe (US); 5. A Gomez (Ec); 6. T Mayotte (US); 7. B Gilbert (US); 8. A Krickstein (US); 9. J Courier (US); 10. J Svensson (Swe); 11. G Forget (Fr); 12. P Sampras (US); 13. M Chang (US); 14. G Korda (Cz); 15. L Lomonte (Fr); 16. Y Noah (Fr).
Women
1. S Graf (Wg); 2. M Navratilova (US); 3. M Seles (Ug); 4. G Sabatini (Arg); 5. Z Garrison (US); 6. A Sanchez-Vicario (Sp); 7. K Maleeva (Bul); 8. M Maleeva (Swe); 9. M J Fernandez (US); 10. H Sukova (Cz); 11. N Zvereva (USSR); 12. J Capriati (US); 13. J Novotna (Cz); 14. J Wiesner (Aust); 15. R Fairbank (SA); 16. B Paulus (Aust).

Martina Navratilova are seeded to meet in the final of the women's singles.

The one main difference from before is that, after his comprehensive victory over Boris Becker in the final of the Stella Artois tournament on Sunday, Lendl has justified his position, despite the presence of Becker, the defending champion, and Stefan Edberg, the 1988 champion, seeded two and three respectively.

Last year Edberg was two and Becker slightly disgusted at being No. 3. He should have no complaints this year.

In the men's seedings, the committee has made three adjustments to the computer rankings. John McEnroe has rightly been made No. 4 seed above Andre Gomez, the French champion, Brad Gilbert, and Aaron Krickstein.

Tim Mayotte, five times a quarter-finalist and once a semi-finalist at Wimbledon, has also been moved above Gilbert and Krickstein, neither of whom would win distinguished service medals on grass.

The third change is that Juan Aguilera, of Spain, a clay-court specialist who is ranked fifteenth in the world, has not been seeded, allowing Yannick Noah to sneak in as the last seed. This will be the spectacular Frenchman's first Wimbledon since 1987. In six attempts, he has not gone beyond the third round. But then again, this will be the Spaniard's debut on grass, so he should be allowed to suffer in peace.

The women's seedings accord with the computer, the only absentee from the top 16 being Conchita Martinez. Three of the top ten — Andre Agassi, Thomas Muster and Emilio Sanchez — are missing from the men's singles draw.

Otherwise, the main contrast is between the age profile of the two sets of singles seeds. In the men's, three of the top five — Lendl, McEnroe and Gomez — are over 30, while Mayotte, who had to pull out of the Stella Artois with a back spasm, is 29 and Gilbert 28. Compared to Capriati and Seles, the French Open champion at 16½ Graf, at just 21, and Sabatini, at 20, are in the twilight zone and Navratilova, at 33, a relic from the Ice Age.

There is one other historical curiosity: the Maleevas, Katerina and Manuela, are believed to be the first sisters to be seeded together at Wimbledon. There is a third, Magdalena, on the horizon too. She won the junior singles in Paris and is said to be the best of the lot.

AAA investigating status of thrower

By DAVID POWELL,
ATHLETICS CORRESPONDENT

THE Amateur Athletic Association has set up an investigation into the case of Jeff Clare, the Northern Counties discus champion, who was discovered by the sport yesterday to be operating as a professional rugby league player. AAA laws declare ineligible from competition anyone who is a professional in any other sport.

Clare said after his northern title win on Saturday — when he also picked up a bronze medal in the shot — that he was "classed as an amateur" with Salford. But both his club and the Rugby League said yesterday that he was a registered professional. "Clearly he has rendered himself ineligible," Tony Ward, the AAA spokesman, said after athletics officials had been in touch with the rugby club.

Should the AAA apply the rulebook on concluding its investigation, the judgement will have ramifications for Clare's club, Haringey, in the British League first division. Haringey, the league leaders, fielded him in their most recent fixture nine days ago and he finished fourth in the discus. "If he was ineligible to compete the points would have to be deducted," Mike Ison, the league secretary, said.

Clare forsook a promising career in rugby league so that he could continue in athletics, his favourite sport. David Oxley, the chief executive of the Rugby League, said that Clare had shown "enormous promise" and that his potential was such that he could have earned some £50,000 a year full-time with Wigan; as an 18-year-old, Clare scored the winning try in his club's 1983 John Player Special Cup semi-final.

"Fifty thousand pounds a year doesn't enter into it. What would I do in the summer if I didn't have athletics?" Clare said at the weekend. Instead, he opted for a less committed approach to rugby league while developing his athletics.

Emma Roseware, the Rugby League's head of player personnel, said yesterday: "According to our records, he is registered as a professional and is contracted until the end of June next year." Graham McCarty, the Salford secretary, said: "Jeff is a part-time professional."

150 000 000